ABOUT THE HISTORICAL REPORT

Secretary of State Charlie Daniels is proud to present the 2008 edition of the Historical Report of Arkansas. Published just once each decade by order of the General Assembly, this ready reference is a compendium of elected officials who have served over the state's 172-year history, including detailed results from state and federal elections. Feature essays offer insight into the state's history, politics and State Capitol construction as well as the state's native peoples.

The 2008 edition carries on more than a century of similar publications, which appeared as early as 1880. In 1895, the Arkansas legislature first mandated the publication of a biennial report that detailed the accomplishments of the secretary of state and state government in general, including statistical and historical information "as will be useful and instructive to the citizens of this state." The contents of the Biennial Reports varied by administration until economic hardships likely ended the series with the 1926 edition. The tradition was renewed in 1958 when Secretary of State C.G. "Crip" Hall published a volume that has served as the model for its successors, including this sixth edition in the decennial series.

For the 2008 Historical Report of Arkansas, great effort has been made to update the book's format and make its contents more navigable and more accurate. Authorized by the 86th and 87th General Assemblies, this volume was compiled and designed by the Secretary of State's office and published in collaboration with the University of Arkansas Press.

FOREWORD

Secretary of State Charlie Daniels

The Arkansas Secretary of State is an archivist, registrar and resource for a variety of constituents. What might be surprising, however, is the scope of these roles and the variety of services that touch each Arkansan in very real ways. Our voters, our businesses, our students—it is an honor to serve each of these constituencies, and my staff and I have taken great pride to ensure integrity, accuracy and accessibility in public service to the people of Arkansas since 2003.

I have had the unique privilege to make monumental changes in the three areas of duty for this office: election reforms, technological advances in business filings and historic restorations to the State Capitol. In addition, I have expanded programs for civics education and improved the experience for the many visitors to the State Capitol. I hope the lasting legacy of my administration will be in the goals we set and the progress we have made in these areas of responsibility. The following is an overview of our work, which I hope will make Arkansans proud for generations to come.

ELECTIONS DIVISION

One of the most important duties I have as Secretary of State is to maintain the records for all federal, state and district elections held in Arkansas. This includes all stages of the elections process, from filing candidates for office and maintaining their financial reports to certifying and recording election results. My office also verifies petition signatures for state ballot issues and publishes a number of voter education materials, including Voting 101 – A Pocket Guide to Voting in the Natural State.

During my tenure, however, my duties as chief elections officer for the state greatly expanded from one of record-keeper and resource to that of an administrator and compliance officer under the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA), the largest federally-mandated election reform law in history.

Modernizing Elections

Nationwide problems that occurred during the 2000 presidential election brought to light the need for new federal and state election practices. In response, Congress mandated changes in almost every part of the voting process, from voter registration to the types of voting equipment used at the polls. The goal was to make registering and voting as simple as possible in order to ensure accessibility and accuracy.

My administration coordinated that effort in Arkansas, working very closely with county election officials to implement the monumental changes required under HAVA. I formed a bipartisan committee of local election officials, disability groups, state agencies, minority groups, legislators and other stakeholders to help draft a state compliance plan and guide the implementation process. After a careful review and discussion, my office guided the installation of a uniform, centralized voter registration system, as well as two types of electronic voting systems to comply with the mandates of HAVA bringing an end to punch cards, lever machines and hand counted paper ballots in the state and greatly improving technological access to voter registration data.

A Network of Voters

The first component of the state's plan went online in December 2005 with NOVA, the Network of Voters in Arkansas. This uniform voter registration system enables state and county election officials to manage elections quickly, easily and more efficiently through one centralized system.

Previously, county officials across the state used one system for voter information, but exchanging information between counties was not possible. With county offices networked to one uniform, centralized database, the enhanced features of NOVA make it easier for the state to maintain the system and for county officials to manage their voter records. Election officials share data with other county clerks, the Division of Motor Vehicles, the Department of Health and the Arkansas Department of Community Punishment. More communication helps prevent duplicate and fraudulent registrations and reduce bloated voter rolls. The NOVA system provides a convenient service to Arkansans by allowing voters to check voter registration status and find polling locations online through www.votenaturally.org, a one-stop election resource website.

Accessible Voting

Each polling site in Arkansas now offers at least one accessible electronic touch screen with special features for voters with limited vision or mobility. In addition, each county selected one of three options for their voting and tabulation systems: all-electronic touch screens, precinct-count optical scan systems or central-count optical scan systems. This allowed local officials to choose the most efficient, cost-effective option for their county to cast and count votes. My office administered the federal funding for counties to purchase the new equipment, allowing Arkansas to fully comply with HAVA's requirements in time for the 2006 General Election.

A vital component of the HAVA transition was—and continues to be—the training of county clerks, election commissioners and poll workers. My team of election coordinators assists counties by holding regular operational training sessions on both the voter registration system and the vote tabulation and reporting hardware and software systems. My office also distributes funds to help bring polling sites up to the accessibility standards of the Americans with Disabilities Act. Through 2008, my office has distributed more than $474,000 to 42 counties with improvements to almost 400 polling sites.

A New Primary

The elections of 2008 brought another major change for Arkansas with the addition of a separate presidential primary in February. The General Assembly enacted legislation in 2005 to hold an earlier presidential primary in order to increase the state's prominence in selecting party nominees. However, other states followed suit, resulting in 24 states holding primaries or caucuses the same day. Voter turnout for the new primary improved to 35 percent of registered voters, compared to 22 percent in 2004. This can partly be attributed to strong Arkansas connections in the race: former Governor Mike Huckabee and former First Lady Hillary Clinton were both on the ballot for the Republican and Democratic nominations, respectively.

FOREWORD

Other Elections Services

In addition to maintaining the state's election records, the department serves as a clearinghouse for campaign finance reports that are filed with the Arkansas Ethics Commission. My staff and I worked closely with the Ethics Commission to create an online filing system for many of those reports. This new system is not only more convenient for candidates, political action committees and registered lobbyists, it also makes the reports searchable and therefore more accessible for the public.

Another area that expanded its online offerings is the Arkansas Register, a compendium of administrative rules and regulations adopted by state agencies, boards and commissions. We built a searchable online database for the filings in order to make it easier for the public to view the information and offer their input during the rule-making process. For these efforts, the Arkansas Register was awarded the 2008 Robert J. Colborn Jr. Innovation Award by the Administrative Codes and Registers division of the National Association of Secretaries of State.

BUILDING & GROUNDS DIVISION

Another honor of the Secretary of State's office is maintaining the State Capitol building and surrounding 25-acre grounds, which welcome more than 100,000 visitors each year. Completed in 1915, the State Capitol is both museum and active center of state government, so its care presents a number of unique challenges to address damage that time, weather and use have inflicted on the historic building with minimal interruption to the business of the people.

In addition to daily housekeeping and maintenance, the division provides many services including construction, mechanical, electrical and landscaping work, historic restoration and support for the many public events held on site.

Preserving the Past

One of my top personal priorities when I took office was to continue a comprehensive restoration plan to preserve the beauty of our State Capitol and ensure the safety and integrity of the magnificent structure. I obtained more than $4.1 million in grants from the Arkansas Natural and Cultural Resources Council (ANCR) to make the work possible.

In the first phase of restoration, crews worked to restore the historical integrity of the main entry to the Capitol, from Woodlane Street to the monumental front steps. In addition to restoring and improving access to several notable monuments, crews refurbished crumbling limestone steps and created a new curving promenade that is more like the architects' original plan for the Capitol grounds.

In 2005, we began our most visible work—restoring and repairing the dome and building façades, which had become heavily stained over time by fungus and algae. Previous cleaning and repair techniques such as resurfacing, sandblasting and synthetic caulking actually accelerated damage. With the cured limestone surfaces opened, water easily seeped in and became trapped behind the sealed joints for decades. Ornamental elements and ledges bore the most damage and were at the greatest risk for cracks and erosion. To repair the damage, crews cleaned surfaces with low-pressure sprays and removed caulk and old cement mortar, replacing it with a more pliable lime-based mortar that “breathes” with the stonework. The dramatic difference in the restored stone may be most evident in the now gleaming Capitol Dome, which stands out brilliantly against the skyline and is one of the first landmarks visitors to Little Rock will recognize. I was honored to receive an award in 2007 for outstanding achievement in historic preservation from the Historic Preservation Alliance of Arkansas, recognizing the Capitol Dome restoration project. I hope to secure additional ANCRC grants in order to complete the final stage, the eastern façade, before the end of my term.

I have also overseen the renovation of other areas, including the Capitol Hill Building, Capitol Café, and a number of offices and public spaces throughout the Capitol.

One landmark addition to the Capitol’s landscape during my tenure was Testament, a monument that honors the Little Rock Nine who integrated Central High School in 1957. More than 800 people attended the dedication on August 20, 2005, including the nine students who are immortalized by the bronze sculptures created by John and Kathy Deering. Since its installation, Testament has become one of the most visited sites on the Capitol grounds, and it often serves as an open-air classroom for school groups studying the Civil Rights movement.

Creating a Warm Welcome

Another highlight of my term was renovating the first floor rotunda area into a new state-of-the-art Capitol Visitor Center. Opened in October 2007, the area welcomes visitors with an interactive information center, theater and a business area with wireless Internet access. The project replaced dated paneling with hand-crafted millwork and marble countertops for the Capitol Gift Shop (which I reopened in 2003), Capitol Police dispatch, U.S. Post Office and tour center. The design incorporates a number of the Capitol’s existing ornamental details and creates a uniform look. With new lighting and additional seating, the updated appearance and improved access have created a cohesive, welcoming experience for the Capitol’s guests.

BUSINESS & COMMERCIAL SERVICES DIVISION

In order to streamline our services for Arkansas businesses, I created the Business and Commercial Services Division (BCS) in 2003, consolidating Corporations, Franchise Tax, Uniform Commercial Code and Notary Public Registration. This move has allowed our staff to work more efficiently by cross-training on different services in order to address seasonal fluctuations in work flow.

FOREWORD

The duties of the BCS Division include processing filings for foreign and domestic corporations doing business in the state, collecting corporate franchise taxes, registering notaries public, recording trademarks and filings pertaining to secured loans made by commercial financial institutions under the Uniform Commercial Code, processing apostilles and conducting lien searches.

Following consolidation, BCS focused their efforts on modernizing services, making almost all of them available online and moving toward a paperless era. In addition to providing many necessary forms online, the division worked with the Information Network of Arkansas to offer online filing capabilities. Businesses have embraced the convenience and speed of the online system, using it for many services including certificates of good standing, franchise tax payments and UCC filings. In fact, our system for automated processing of online filings was awarded the 2007 Digital Government Achievement Award by the Center for Digital Government.

The need to address inadequate school funding led the state legislature in 2003 to increase franchise taxes in order to generate additional revenue for education spending. The new franchise tax schedule, improved online services and bulk filing capabilities were all factors in increasing franchise tax collections from $8.9 million in 2003 to more than $20.6 million in 2008.

A Business Resource

More than collecting forms and payments, I wanted the BCS division to be a resource for businesses and others around the state. The first step was to improve communications through a quarterly newsletter dedicated to the office's business customers. Arkansas, Inc. provides a forum for sharing news of interest regarding BCS services, legislative changes and reporting deadlines. Other new publications, such as Doing Business in Arkansas and the Notary Public Handbook serve as a guide book and teaching tool for those customers.

I also began an outreach program that offers training opportunities around the state. Doing Business in Arkansas, Notary Public Training and Batch Filing for Franchise

Taxes are some of the topics available. Our outreach staff conducts a regular schedule of presentations in our local training facility, as well as in various locations around the state. Businesses may also request private workshops on-site for their employees. As the number of Hispanic entrepreneurs continues to grow in Arkansas, my office has extended our services to meet a growing need. We now offer Spanish translations of three of our most-used guides and make almost a dozen presentations to Hispanic groups each year. We also have bilingual staff on hand to assist an average of 100 Spanish-speaking customers each month.

In 2007, Arkansas became one of the first states to enact the Model Registered Agent Act drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. This act defines commercial and non-commercial registered agents, standardizes and clarifies service of process procedures and details the duties of registered agents.

Advisory Board

In 2006, I appointed a Business and Commercial Services Advisory Board to help keep a pulse on the changing needs of the state's business community. The board consists of professionals from diverse fields such as law, banking, accounting, business administration, public service and government, as well as private citizens. By promoting this level of feedback from the business community, we have found ways to streamline a number of services. We have also relied on the panel as a sounding board for proposed legislation my office has presented to the Arkansas General Assembly. One such measure was a new requirement for nonprofit corporations to file annual reports in order to clean up records and remove defunct entities from state databases.

COMMUNICATIONS & EDUCATION DIVISION

Another priority when I became Secretary of State was to use the State Capitol as a living classroom that would instill a greater appreciation for Arkansas's rich history and to foster a strong sense of civic duty in our young Arkansans. That emphasis is the primary mission of the Communications & Education Division.

This department coordinates a wide range of services, from Capitol tours, publications, interpretive exhibits and events to civics education, traveling speakers and website management. All of these efforts help support and promote the work of the Secretary of State's office with a special emphasis on programs for Arkansas students.

Building Citizens, Young and Old

Each March and October, hundreds of students from around the state come to the Capitol to participate in our Young Voter Education workshops. My staff developed the multimedia program that uses games, role playing and current events discussions to engage students and make the fight for voting rights a personal issue for them. The Young Voter Education program has been so successful that we developed a traveling edition for school presentations.

The Communications & Education division has become a resource for teachers around the state, developing a number of materials for civics education. The Traveler's Guide to Arkansas (www.soskids.arkansas.gov) is the office's dedicated website for students. Arranged by grade level, the contents include state symbols, a timeline of Arkansas History, biographical sketches of the state's governors and many other topics on state history and civics. The department also led the effort to create Arkansas-specific civics lesson plans for kindergarten through eighth grade classes. Arkansas Builds Citizens was developed in partnership with the University of Central Arkansas, the Arkansas Department of Education and a panel of Arkansas educators. Aligned with state social studies frameworks, the lessons were funded in part by grants from the Arkansas Humanities Council and the Center for Civic Education and are provided on CD-ROM at no charge to classroom teachers around the state.

The Communications & Education team also coordinates the office's voter education programs, which includes the development of multi-media advertising and promotion campaigns to encourage voter registration and voter turnout. The centerpiece of these efforts is the office's website, which is the most publicly accessible and convenient source for voting information. This effort was especially important in 2006 because we were charged with informing voters of the new voting systems being implemented around the state.

All of these programs and other available materials are highlighted during in-service workshops my staff presents each summer to teachers around the state.

Tours and More

Through our tour service program, tens of thousands of visitors enjoy guided tours of the State Capitol each year. I have expanded our tour program by adding self-guided tours for both the Capitol's interior and grounds. We also developed Capitol Quest, an architectural scavenger hunt that offers young explorers a new perspective on the makings of an historic structure.

Among the other programs that the Communications & Education Division coordinates are the annual holiday celebration at the Capitol, the National Student/Parent Mock Election and the office's bureau of public speakers. It also maintains the Capitol's architectural drawings and other historic documents and provides photography services for the Secretary of State's office. My office houses almost a century of photographic history, and in 2008, our photographers began a long-term project to arrange and identify these images to build a searchable electronic catalog that will make the images more accessible for future generations of Arkansans.

As you can see, serving as Secretary of State has given me many unique and fascinating opportunities to serve the people of Arkansas. It has been a true privilege to oversee the historic changes that have taken place during my tenure, especially our work to implement the federal Help America Vote Act in Arkansas as well as our efforts to restore and preserve the Capitol façade. These were momentous projects that required the dedication and skill of my staff members and—especially in the case of HAVA—the commitment of hundreds of others around the state. I cannot express how much I appreciate each person who contributed to these achievements.

I stand proud of all that we have accomplished these past six years and look forward to completing a number of other goals in the final two years of my term. It is my aim to obtain sufficient funding to complete the final phase of exterior restoration on the Capitol. We will also continue to expand the services available online and offer even more resources for our students. My sincere hope is that my work has made the office of secretary of state more efficient and more available to meet the needs of the public. I want to extend personal thanks to the people of Arkansas for allowing me to have this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. It has been an honor and a pleasure to serve you.

TWENTY QUESTIONS ABOUT ARKANSAS INDIANS

Ann M. Early and George Sabo III

More than 25 years ago, Dr. Frank F. Schambach, then the Arkansas Archeological Survey's research station archeologist at Southern Arkansas University in Magnolia, put together a presentation called "Twenty Questions about American Indians." The slide show became a hit, with public schools and local civic organizations requesting programs; Dr. Schambach graciously shared the slide set with colleagues across the state, who found it a valuable addition to the set of presentations we all keep at the ready for use when a call comes out of the blue asking for a talk "the day after tomorrow." Each of us modified the original as we spoke "off the cuff" to groups ranging from elementary school students to senior citizens; no formal script was ever produced.

Here we reprise "Twenty Questions": twenty brief essays examining key points and issues related to Native Arkansans. Our responses incorporate the results of recent research in and around the state; we hope that the readers of the Historical Report will find this a handy reference and a useful guide to additional reading.

1. How did the first humans get to America?

The first movement of people into the Americas was part of a global expansion of human populations at the end of the last Ice Age that resulted in the occupation of every major landmass in the world except Antarctica. Archeological finds suggest that some Asiatic hunting groups crossed a thousand-mile wide land bridge connecting Siberia with Alaska, while others traveled in boats across the north Pacific rim to reach North America sometime between 16,500 and 13,500 years ago (between 14,500 and 11,500 B.C.). These Paleoindians spread very rapidly across the continent, reaching the Mid-South/Arkansas region shortly after 11,500 B.C.

2. What archeological periods are recognized in Arkansas?

The Paleoindian period represents the adaptations of those first people to occupy this region at the end of the last Ice Age, from 11,500 – 8,500 B.C. Paleoindians were nomadic (moving from place to place throughout the year) and lived mainly by hunting. Next comes the Archaic period (8,500 – 650 B.C.), during which people gradually settled down in early Holocene (modern, post-Ice Age) environments. These people were hunters and gatherers, but around 5,000 years ago they domesticated the first garden plants and a few centuries later constructed the first monumental earthworks. The Woodland period (650 B.C. – A.D. 900) witnessed the expansion of gardening and the development of small farming villages. Woodland Indians buried some of their dead under earthen mounds and they also constructed large ceremonial centers, such as the Toltec Mounds site near Little Rock. During the Mississippi period (A.D. 900 – 1541), large agricultural towns developed in eastern and southern Arkansas.

3. How did Paleoindians live? What were their lives like?

Paleoindians were nomadic hunters who possessed a very effective weapon technology based on a multi-piece spear propelled using a throwing stick or “atlatl.” The animals they hunted—which included now-extinct species such as mammoths and mastodons as well as smaller game like bison, caribou, and deer—provided hides and other raw materials for making clothing and tents. Small groups moved frequently, but stayed close to other groups with whom they could exchange food and other materials, share information, and obtain marriage partners. Over time, many such groups began to settle down into regional territories. In eastern Arkansas, stylistic differences in Paleoindian projectile points found on either side of Crowley’s Ridge suggest the existence of two distinct groups in that part of the Mississippi Valley.

4. Which Native groups lived in Arkansas when Europeans arrived?

The first Europeans to set foot in what is now Arkansas were the Spanish conquistadores, led by Hernando de Soto, who crossed the Mississippi River in the spring of 1541. We are uncertain about the cultural identities of the many Arkansas tribes whom the Spaniards encountered, because the names written down by de Soto’s chroniclers are very different from the names of tribes identified by subsequent explorers. When Marquette and Jolliet and La Salle reached what is now Arkansas in the late seventeenth century, they encountered Quapaw and Tunica Indians living in the eastern and central parts of the state. The Osages ranged into northwest Arkansas from villages located in southwestern Missouri. Caddo Indians occupied villages in the Ouachita Mountains and Gulf Coastal Plains of southwestern Arkansas.

5. What did Native Arkansans eat?

Dietary information comes mainly from animal and plant remains preserved at archeological sites. Deer and bear were important sources of meat, along with smaller forest-dwelling animals such as rabbits, squirrels, and turkey. Ducks, geese, and other waterfowl were taken, as were many species of fish, shellfish, amphibians, and reptiles. Nuts and acorns (which were processed to remove the bitter tannins) were collected in great quantities, along with fruits and edible tubers. By 5,000 years ago, Indians began to harvest the seeds of various plants, including maygrass, little barley, lamb’s quarters, knotweed, and sunflower, and they cultivated several kinds of wild gourds and squashes. Corn, originally domesticated by Mexican Indians, replaced most of the locally- domesticated plants after A.D. 1000 and, along with beans and various species of squash, became the mainstay of Southeastern Indian agriculture.

6. How did Indians hunt and catch fish?

For many thousands of years, Indians hunted with a multi-piece spear or dart. Sometime around A.D. 600, the bow and arrow was introduced and rapidly became the weapon of choice for most Southeastern Indian hunters. Indians used a variety of other devices to take smaller game, including snares, traps, deadfalls, nets, bolas, and slings. Indians caught fish using carved bone or antler hooks, nets woven of plant fiber cordage, and traps woven of wood or cane splints. Weirs made of stone and stick walls were set across streams and rivers to harvest larger catches during spawning seasons, often with the aid of nets and pronged fish spears.

7. How did Indians learn to domesticate wild plants?

As Indian groups began to establish more settled life-ways during the Archaic period, cleared areas surrounding their campsites were invaded by weeds—including maygrass, little barley, lamb’s quarters, knotweed, and sunflower—that produce abundant quantities of nutritious seeds. Indians not only began to collect these seeds for use as food, they also began to manage the annual cycles of plant growth by eliminating the smallest specimens from stands of these plants and sowing the seeds of the larger, healthier plants. Such intervention introduced selective pressures favoring certain traits, resulting in the evolution of new plant species producing larger and more abundant and nutritious seeds. This process came with a cost: the newly domesticated species were now dependent on human cultivation. Plant remains preserved in dry Ozark rock shelter sites demonstrate (via radiocarbon dating) that humans in this region succeeded in domesticating some of these plant species by 5,000 years ago.

8. How did Indians make stone tools?

Stone tool making was an important element of ancient technology. Many kinds of stone were used, though chert (a flint-like stone), which forms in limestone bedrock deposits, was by far the most important resource. Indians collected raw materials where they could, often extracting stone from bedrock sources at quarry sites or obtaining “exotic” materials via long-distance trade. Two stone tool-making technologies were used. Chipped stone tool making was used to make projectile points; cutting, scraping, and perforating implements; and chopping tools such as adze, axe, and hoe blades. In this technology, a hard hammer stone is used to break flakes away from a core, or large chunk of the raw material. Large flakes are then brought to a desired shape by striking off smaller flakes, using either a hammer stone or a “soft” hammer such as a wood or antler billet, and finishing and sharpening the piece by pressing off very tiny flakes from the edges, using an antler tine or similar implement. The other technology is based on grinding and abrading. Various implements (ranging from hard stones to hollow reeds) are used with abrasive grits to shape and drill resilient stone into a finished form with the desired amount of polish. Axe and adze blades, stone mortars and pestles, tobacco pipes, and figurines were manufactured using these techniques. Both chipped- and ground-stone tool-making require a great deal of knowledge, experience, patience, and dexterity.

9. Why did Indians build mounds?

Mound building is an ancient practice that began in the Southeast more than 5,000 years ago. The oldest mounds in Arkansas were built around 3,500 years ago. These early mounds were probably constructed as ceremonial centers to mark sacred places. A few centuries later, Archaic Indians in northeastern Louisiana constructed the famous Poverty Point site, consisting of six earthen mounds—the largest in the shape of a bird—along with six massive concentric earthen ridges on which hundreds of houses were placed. One interpretation suggests that the symmetrical, orderly layout of these earthworks provided the community with a sense of protection against malevolent supernatural forces. During the Woodland period (650 B.C. – A.D. 900), many communities built earthen mounds over the graves of deceased leaders and their relatives, thereby marking the landscape with physical reminders of a community's ancestral legacy. Later in the Woodland era, natives also began to construct platform mounds—pyramidal in shape with flat upper surfaces—that served as central places for religious activities. The premier example in Arkansas is the Toltec Mounds site near Scott (preserved as Toltec Mounds State Park), where Woodland Indians constructed 18 mounds in an area enclosed by a mile-long earthwork and ditch complex. These mounds were oriented on the landscape to provide observation points for tracking solar solstice and equinox positions. During Mississippian times (A.D. 900 – 1541), agricultural communities in eastern and southern Arkansas constructed large ceremonial complexes, some with several platform mounds on which temples and mortuary shrines were built. The first explorers in the Mississippi Valley witnessed the last uses of such mounds.

10. Did Natives have religion?

All Native peoples maintained beliefs about how the world was created, how people originated, and how people came to possess the commonly accepted principles that guide them through their lives. While each of more than 500 distinct American Indian societies that existed when Europeans first arrived in America had their own versions of such beliefs, there were some widely shared elements. Many Southeast Indian communities, for example, envisioned a three-layer universe consisting of: This World, inhabited by people, animals, and plants; Above World, populated by creative forces and various spirit beings including the souls of ancestors; and Below World, containing chaotic forces but also holding the promise of a better future. The role of humans in these belief systems was to perform rituals and other acts to maintain a balance between opposing spiritual powers so that favorable circumstances would prevail in This World.

11. Did Native tribes use writing?

North American Indians did not have alphabetic or phonemic writing systems before the arrival of Europeans, though many groups developed forms of picture writing with which they decorated architectural surfaces, clothing, and other material items as well as trees, natural rock surfaces, and other landscape features. Several Middle American writing systems developed in pre-Columbian times; the most well-known of these is the hieroglyphic form of writing developed by the Maya Indians of Mexico around 250 B.C. A Cherokee Indian named George Gist or Guess, also known as Sequoyah, introduced a syllabic writing system for the Cherokee language in 1819, when he was living in the Western Cherokee settlement near present-day Dardanelle, Arkansas. The Cherokee “syllabary” or alphabet was used to publish books, newspapers, and journals and by 1830 nearly 90 percent of the Cherokees could read and write in their own language. The Cherokee system was adapted as a form of writing for numerous other North American Indian languages.

12. Did Indians produce art, and for what purposes was art used?

Art works played an important role in all Native communities. A red ochre zigzag design drawn on the frontal bone of an extinct species of bison at an Oklahoma Paleoindian site may represent an early use of art in hunting rituals. Archaic-period Indians produced even more elaborate geometrical designs and also made small sculptures of animals, insects, and people to represent relationships connecting different communities of beings who share the earth. During the Woodland period, Indians decorated ceramics, engraved bone and shell, carved stone and wood, made copper and mica cutouts, and wove fabrics and basketry in designs to express their cultural identities and views of the world. Mississippian period Indians used these same media, plus others such as embossed sheet copper, to create elaborate designs and action scenes that reflected their identities, social institutions, and beliefs, as well as key scenes from important mythic narratives.

13. Did Indians enjoy good health?

Studies of Indian skeletal remains indicate that Pre-Columbian Indians suffered none of the deadliest diseases afflicting modern civilizations, such as cancer, strokes, heart failure, and diabetes. This is because for most of their history Indians lived in small, relatively clean settlements and engaged in vigorous activities that among other things provided a healthy and varied diet. One negative consequence of this vigorous lifestyle, however, was an elevated frequency of skeletal joint ailments such as osteoarthritis. The shift to high carbohydrate diets that came with the advent of agriculture produced increases in dental caries (cavities) and, at first, poor overall nutrition. The health effects of poor diets were corrected as Indians learned to make adjustments in the consumption of agriculturally produced foods. For example, adding beans to corn-based diets provided a more complete nutritional balance. Concentration of populations into larger and more crowded towns during Mississippian times, on the other hand, led to increases in rates of infection and interpersonal violence. Longevity among all Indian groups was lower than life expectancy in modern societies, due mainly to high infant mortality rates and the lack of modern technologies that extend the lives of the seriously ill and injured. With the arrival of Europeans, Indians were exposed to Old World diseases to which they had no immunological defense. Consequently, in some areas of the New World, including parts of the Southeast, Indian populations declined by as much as 90 percent.

14. Did Indians enjoy much leisure time, and if so, how did they spend it?

Since the quest for food and the production of necessary goods required only a few hours of work per day, Indians enjoyed considerable leisure time. They devoted much of that time to philosophy, oral literature and the arts, education, and recreation. Many people, and especially the elders, spent much time pondering the origins of the universe and the natural and spiritual forces regulating life on earth. Deriving clues from careful observations of nature, Indians developed elaborate philosophies that enabled them to understand their place in world. Such insights were often translated into stories that were handed down from generation to generation. Modern versions of these stories (recorded as “myths” by folklorists, historians, and anthropologists) are highly entertaining and involve the adventures, and sometimes the misadventures, of numerous characters and culture heroes. Indians devoted considerable time to producing art works illustrating their views of the world. Games and contests, in addition to providing great fun, were also used to instruct and to sharpen critical life skills.

15. What happened to the Indians living in Arkansas? Where did they end up?

Tunica Indians moved out of Arkansas to Louisiana and Mississippi at the end of the seventeenth century, to take advantage of trade opportunities with French settlers in the lower Mississippi valley and along the Gulf Coast. During the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, the United States government began to sign treaties with Cherokees and other Southeast tribes that forced them to vacate their homelands and move across the Mississippi River into what is now Arkansas. To make room for these immigrants, additional treaties were signed that reduced Caddo, Osage, and Quapaw land holdings. Within a few decades all Arkansas lands were opened for settlement by white Americans, so the Indians—indigenous and immigrant—were forced to cede their remaining lands and move to specially designated reservation areas in Indian Territory, which comprised parts of modern Oklahoma and Kansas.

16. What are Indians like today?

While some American Indians continue to live on reservations, most live like other Americans in big cities, small towns, and rural areas in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. Many Caddos, Osages, and Quapaws live in Oklahoma, while most Tunicas live in Louisiana. Some Indians are farmers or ranchers, while others are medical doctors, lawyers, school teachers, government or military employees, or work in business or industry. Many Indians participate in tribal activities that maintain and perpetuate ancient cultural traditions. There are today more than 17,000 people in Arkansas who identify themselves as Indians.

17. Where can I see Indian sites in Arkansas?

The Arkansas Department of Parks and Tourism manages two state parks at important archeological sites. Toltec Mounds State Park in Scott, Arkansas (near Little Rock), offers exhibits and tours of the mounds and earthworks that represent the premier ceremonial center in the central Arkansas River valley during late Woodland and early Mississippian times (A.D. 650 – 1000). Parkin Archeological State Park, between Wynne and West Memphis, is the site of a large, fortified Mississippian town occupied from A.D. 1000 into the sixteenth century. Archeologists believe the Parkin site was the town of Casqui that Hernando de Soto visited in 1541. Several rock art sites can be visited along hiking trails in Petit Jean State Park located between Russellville and Morrilton, Arkansas.

18. What should I do if I discover an Indian site or find Indian artifacts?

You should contact the nearest Arkansas Archeological Survey research station. The Survey's professional staff can identify the artifacts and determine if the site has been reported previously. While the Survey will not confiscate your collections, you should not purposely dig for artifacts, as this may violate a variety of state and federal laws. For a directory of research stations, consult the Survey's web site:

www.uark.edu/campus-resources/archinfo/about.html

19. How can I find out what my Indian artifact collection is worth?

Professional archeologists and modern Indians discourage the buying and selling of artifacts. The commercial sale of artifacts promotes the destruction of archeological sites by looting, which is like tearing out the pages of history books thereby making it all the more difficult to learn about the past. Artifacts can help archeologists reconstruct history only when information is preserved about the contexts from which artifacts were removed. Trafficking in artifacts is even more disheartening for modern Indians, for whom artifacts represent the legacy of their ancestors. There are other risks involved in buying and selling artifacts; you may be offered artifacts that were stolen from private land (dug up without permission), looted from a grave, or removed from state or federal land (which is a felony). You may also end up paying a lot of money for fake artifacts.

20. How can I learn more about Arkansas Indians?

The Arkansas Archeological Survey publishes many books on Arkansas archeology and Arkansas Indians, including several written specifically for general audiences. Information on ordering these books is available on the Survey's website:

ARKANSAS ELECTORAL HISTORY

Jay Barth

Even for the historically one-party Democratic South, the Democratic Party's control of Arkansas politics was cement-like until the end of the twentieth century. Indeed, from the end of Reconstruction, even Republican presidential candidates were denied Electoral College votes every four years until Richard Nixon's 1972 victory. The Democratic Party's dominance of state and local elections (outside northwest Arkansas, which had housed Republicans since the Civil War era) was just as impressive. Indeed, few state political parties have experienced histories as hapless as that of Arkansas's Republicans. Following the Democratic disenfranchisement of the state's African-Americans (most of whom identified as Republicans) in the last years of the nineteenth century, Arkansas's Republicans focused more on the gaining of patronage from Republican administrations in Washington than in ardently contesting elections at home that would inevitably be lost. Until the 1990s, Republican victories in statewide elections were almost always attributable to Democratic failings rather than Republican ingenuity. Still, while Democrats have fended off any sustained Republican development, recent trends indicate that a more consistently vibrant two-party system has come to the state.

Before statehood, Arkansas politics was dominated by a small group known by a variety of names, most commonly "the Family", whose clannish politics continued to express itself after statehood in 1836. This Johnson-Conway-Sevier-Rector cousinhood accumulated 190 years of public office-holding, including two U.S. senators and three governors in antebellum Arkansas; other offices went only to their partisans. Because the Family was allied with President Andrew Jackson, Arkansas began its political life dominated by the Democratic Party. The opposing faction, which almost by default became associated with the Whigs, at times generated rather spirited opposition. Still, no one but a Democrat won the presidential or gubernatorial election in Arkansas in this era, and the only Whig elected to Congress, Thomas W. Newtown, filled several weeks of an unexpired term opened by Archibald Yell's resignation from the office in 1846.

During the Reconstruction era, a series of Republicans held the state's preeminent political offices, but the norm of Democratic rule returned immediately after Reconstruction's end in 1874. These "redeemers" shared a generally noninterventionist view of state government, with taxes, appropriations, and regulations kept to a minimum. Frustration about the nonresponsiveness of government grew among farmers in the mid-1880s, as revealed by the growth of populist organizations such as the Farmers' Alliance and the Agricultural Wheel. With African-Americans still active electorally and generally voting for the Party of Lincoln, Republicans recognized in their growing numbers of white populists an opportunity to recapture power through coalitional endeavors. In 1888, they nominated no candidate of their own but instead backed Charles M. Norwood, gubernatorial candidate of the dissident Union-Labor Party; Democrat James P. Eagle defeated Norwood by only about 15,000 votes.

For Democrats unaccustomed to genuine competition, this election was ominously close, especially because of the amount of obvious fraud that had been necessary to secure this narrow victory. A congressional election in the central portion of the state resulted in an even more marginal (and even more dubious) Democratic victory, one followed by the murder of the Republican candidate, who was attempting to provoke a federal investigation of the voting process. In response, the political establishment saw to the enactment of a series of electoral “reforms,” i.e. disfranchising measures, that emasculated the opposition and forced the emerging populist temper to participate within a one-party and generally issueless mold for the next six decades.

The Democrats elected as the state’s delegates in the U.S. House and Senate were typically not challenged vigorously after being elected. As a result, these incumbents built up tremendous power in legislative bodies where seniority was highly valued. Senator Joe T. Robinson (who became Democratic majority leader), Congressman Wilbur D. Mills (who became chair of the Ways and Means Committee), and Senators J. William Fulbright (longtime chair of the Foreign Relations Committee) and John L. McClellan (father of the McClellan-Kerr dam system) exemplify the power that the state had in Washington during this era.

While the first half of the twentieth century witnessed factionalized and chaotic battles in Democratic primaries for state offices, especially for the governorship, Governor Orval Faubus developed a dominant machine after his initial election in 1954. Faubus, who gained national notoriety for his attempts to block the desegregation of Little Rock’s Central High School in 1957, used this powerful organization to gain an unprecedented six terms in office. But he could not transfer his personal organization to other Democrats when he decided to retire in 1966, having appointed every member of every state board and commission. (Faubus later made three failed comeback attempts.)

After disenfranchisement, the only portion of the state that contained significant numbers of white Republicans were the counties of northwest Arkansas, where Republican loyalties could be traced to the Civil War era. Arkansas Republicans became known as “post office Republicans” because, rather than putting energy into developing a political party to challenge Democrats in Arkansas, the activists simply filled the bevy of federal appointments (including postmaster positions) that came with Republican presidential victories. The small number of state legislators who identified themselves as Republicans during the first eight decades of the twentieth century came from these hill counties. It was in this quadrant of the state that modern Republican development first evidenced itself. In 1966, Republican John Paul Hammerschmidt won a U.S. House seat from the area. He would not relinquish it until his 1992 retirement, often facing only token reelection opposition. Hammerschmidt’s only truly close call came in 1974 (an electoral cycle where the Watergate crisis threatened all Republicans) when he beat back the challenge of upstart law professor Bill Clinton.

Also in 1966, the Democratic Party lost the governorship for the first time in the modern era. But the Republican candidate, Winthrop Rockefeller, differed dramatically from those in his party who began to be elected in other Southern states. Rockefeller was a racial liberal who developed a coalition of progressive Democrats disenchanted with the conservative Faibus machine, newly enfranchised African Americans, and traditional Republicans to gain the office and reelection in 1968 over Faibus protégés. (He was joined in success by a victorious Lieutenant Governor candidate Maurice “Footsie” Britt.) Despite his electoral successes, Rockefeller failed to work successfully with the almost totally Democratic legislature and could not advance his reformist agenda.

In 1970, the Democrats nominated for governor the unknown but telegenic progressive Dale Bumpers rather than Faibus. Thus began a new era of dominance for the Democratic Party as its progressives returned home in Bumpers’s easy victory over Rockefeller in the general election. African-American voters followed in subsequent elections, leaving the Republican Party in its traditional and feeble role, except in the state’s northwest corner. Rockefeller’s death in 1973 devastated the state’s Republican party organizationally as it lost a patron committed to investing in the development of a two-party state. In many elections, Democrats—who spanned the ideological spectrum—won office without Republican opposition.

Bumpers was followed to the governorship, and later the U.S. Senate, by another progressive, David Pryor, a personable politician considered by many to be the most popular Arkansas politician of the contemporary era. Pryor served two terms as governor, from 1974 to 1978, before being replaced by a third politician in a similar mold, thirty-two-year-old Attorney General Bill Clinton. Except for the two years after his 1980 upset loss to Republican Frank White, Clinton served as governor until 1992, winning five general elections in a gubernatorial career equaled in tenure only by Faibus.

Bumpers, Pryor, and Clinton—termed by one observer the “Big Three” of modern Arkansas politics—developed separate, yet overlapping, organizations that hampered Republican Party development. No coherent state Democratic organization developed in this period despite the party’s continued electoral success in state and local politics. The culmination of the state’s progressive Democratic era was the election of Clinton in 1992 as the first president from the state.

Despite the historic success of Republican presidential candidates Richard Nixon (in 1972), Ronald Reagan (in 1980 and 1984), and George Bush (in 1988) in the state which had not given the GOP its Electoral College votes since Reconstruction, Republican success in state and congressional politics during the 1970s and 1980s was rare. A chaotic first administration for Democratic Governor Bill Clinton created an opening for Republican Frank White in 1980. In the campaign, White hammered Clinton’s support for increases in fees for car license plates and his inability to prevent the placement of Cuban refugees who later rioted at Fort Chaffee near Fort Smith, and he won an extremely tight election. Two years later, Clinton won a successful return to the office by defeating White. In 1978, Ed Bethune did gain a second congressional seat for the Republicans, from the district covering central Arkansas, which he held for three terms.

In 1989, Bethune’s replacement in Congress, Tommy Robinson, announced his switch to the Republican Party, becoming the party’s highest profile capture of a Democratic officeholder. Soon thereafter, Robinson announced that he would challenge Clinton for governor in 1990. While Robinson had the support of national GOP leaders, he failed to win a Republican primary (open to voters of either party) over another party switcher, Sheffield Nelson. Clinton went on to defeat Nelson solidly in the general election and soon thereafter announced his candidacy for president in the 1992 election. In November of 1992, Clinton celebrated his victory on the steps of the Old State House in Little Rock.

Ironically, this ultimate triumph for the Arkansas Democrats led to the party's first lasting electoral difficulties in the modern era. Clinton's victory elevated Democratic Lieutenant Governor Jim Guy Tucker to the top of state government in late 1992; Tucker was elected governor on his own in 1994. However, in a successful prosecution connected to the investigation of Bill and Hillary Clinton's business dealings in Arkansas, Tucker was convicted by a federal jury in 1996 on a series of charges unrelated to his time as governor. Waiting in the wings to rise to the governorship after Tucker's resignation was a Republican, the former president of the state Southern Baptist Convention, Mike Huckabee. Huckabee, coming off a loss for the U.S. Senate to Bumpers in 1992, had won a closely contested special election in the summer of 1993 to gain the lieutenant governorship and had won reelection in 1994.

The subsequent vacancy in the lieutenant governorship was won by another Republican, Winthrop Paul Rockefeller, the son of the late governor, in a 1996 special election. In contrast to the previous victories of Rockefeller and White, these Republican victories indicated an era of more stable success for the party in statewide politics. The Democrats' new electoral difficulties continued as they lost Pryor's Senate seat in 1996 as Republican Congressman Tim Hutchinson gained the position. The loss—on the same day as Bill Clinton's reelection as President—was historic: It meant Democrats failed to control both Senate seats from the state for the first time since the direct election of U.S. senators commenced. These newly successful Republicans of Arkansas had much more in common ideologically with Republicans elsewhere in the South than did the elder Rockefeller, generally exhibiting conservative positions on both economic and social issues.

Huckabee, who would win his own election as governor in 1998 and re-election in 2002, was the first Republican governor to share some of the personal dynamism of the "Big Three." His conservative populist ideology and savvy communication skills made him the first true state political "star" for the GOP in the modern era. Early suggestions were that Huckabee could become an effective proponent of Republican development in the state. However, while his decade as governor presented grand opportunities to fill the hundreds of positions in the executive branch with Republican loyalists and to take on national Republican leadership roles, Huckabee evidenced little interest in building a strong Republican party organizationally.

Upon Huckabee's retirement (soon after which he began an unsuccessful campaign for the 2008 Republican presidential nomination), Democrats swept all state executive offices in 2006. Democrat Mark Pryor's regaining of his father's Senate seat in 2002 meant that five of six Arkansans representing the state in Washington were Democrats. Moreover, a plurality of Arkansans still identified themselves as Democrats by the early years of the twenty-first century (39 percent, according to the University of Arkansas's 2007 Arkansas Poll). The Arkansas Republican Party remains severely disadvantaged in the experience level of the candidates that it offers for most political offices in the state. This is shown most clearly in state legislative and local level offices, where Arkansas remained one of the most Democratic states in the nation into the twenty-first century. This Democratic legislative dominance persisted despite the implementation of the nation's most severe term limits provisions that disproportionately barred Democrats from continued service.

Still, Republicans are now advantaged in presidential elections in Arkansas, as non-Southern Democratic candidates have shown an inability to connect with the white rural voters who determine statewide outcomes in Arkansas, and races for other high-profile offices in the state are now typically competitive. Moreover, looking to the future, demographic trends favor the Republican Party's development. The most quickly growing areas of the state—northwest Arkansas and the suburbs around Little Rock—are also the areas where Republicans have found the greatest success. Younger voters also seem much more willing to support Republican candidates at all levels than that portion of the electorate that is aging. Still, the state that provided victories to independent George Wallace (for president), Democratic Vietnam opponent J. William Fulbright (for U.S. Senate), and Republican progressive Winthrop Rockefeller (for governor) on the same day in 1968 remains a mysterious and unpredictable place electorally.

THE CENTRAL THEME OF ARKANSAS HISTORY: WHO WE ARE AND HOW WE GOT TO BE THAT WAY.

C. Fred Williams

For much of its early history Arkansas was an untold story to the rest of the nation. What little was known about the region frequently came from negative reports. Relatively few people had any direct experience with the area and if they knew anything at all about Arkansas, it was generally unfavorable. This unflattering public image affected the state's cultural progress and Arkansas remained an underdeveloped region much longer than its neighboring states. Why was this true?

Arkansas' laggardly development was shaped by three independent but interdependent themes: physical geography, adverse public policies and the historical timing of when those policies were put into place. The combination of these forces produced a region whose people were both highly independent and proud of a tradition that separated them from the normal migration of westward expansion. Such formative influences were largely in place by the time of the Civil War, but they continued to shape the state's future for more than one hundred and fifty years.

The impact of physical geography was reflected in the Superintendent of Census's report for 1860. He noted that migration in the United States typically followed an east-to-west path with individuals seldom changing their latitude, allowing them to grow the same crops and use familiar practices in the care and feeding of livestock. This pattern was seen in the migrations from New England through the Great Lakes region, the Upper Midwest and on to the Pacific Northwest. It also characterized the Mid-Atlantic movement through the Ohio River Valley and the Missouri River Valley toward the Central Plains and beyond to the West Coast. Southern migration patterns out of Chesapeake Bay and the Carolinas, however, did not support the Superintendent's thesis, at least in reference to Arkansas.

What had happened? The Appalachian Mountains foiled the Southern migration pattern. Settlers moving west from the tidewater region encountered these mountains as their first physical obstacle. While the eastern ranges were not the disruptive force the Rocky Mountains proved to be for later travelers, the Appalachians nevertheless caused most southern migrants to turn southwest or northwest, following valley floors rather than continuously crossing ridge after ridge. By contrast, in the Mid-Atlantic and New England states the Appalachians curved down almost to the ocean shore. Westering emigrants from these regions emerged from the mountains in short order and thus did not alter their east-west route. Such was not the case with their southern cousins. Passes suitable for heavily loaded wagons were rare in the southern Appalachians; the strain on horses, oxen and humans alike was significant. It did not take long for even the inexperienced traveler to recognize that following the more level terrain of valley floors was easier than crossing ascending and descending ridges. To follow the course of least resistance drew many travelers away from the "normal" east-to-west routes and moved them down into the coastal south bordering the Gulf of Mexico.

Overland travelers undeterred by the rough passes and ridges faced two options on the Appalachian western slope. One choice was to take advantage of water routes afforded by either the Tennessee or Cumberland Rivers. These rivers offered travelers the possibility of resting their weary livestock, building rafts and floating downstream in relative comfort. However, although starting in a southwesterly direction, both rivers eventually turned north and emptied into the Ohio River. The Ohio eventually converged with the Mississippi River but did so more than 100 miles north of Arkansas. Most travelers choosing the water route continued their western journey out the Missouri River and thus missed Arkansas altogether.

A second option for travelers was to follow the Warrior's Path, a long-established trail stretching to the northwest. It had first emerged in pre-Columbian times as buffalo established the route to and from food sources; it became more clearly marked by Native Americans hunting the animals. Both The Warrior's Path and its companion, Daniel Boone's Wilderness Road, blazed after the first Anglo-American migrants passed through Cumberland Gap, led to the Ohio River. This in turn carried travelers to a point on the Mississippi River far north of present-day Arkansas. Thus, the combination of mountain valleys, northwest flowing rivers, and native trails caused the majority of western travelers to bypass Arkansas.

Those hardy migrants not discouraged by the rivers or the trails ultimately faced the Mississippi River flood plain, the greatest physical challenge of all on the westward trek. It was not uncommon for the Mississippi River, at flood stage, to spread out more than seventy miles wide. Even when the water receded to the main channel, boggy pools of stagnant water remained well into the summer. Over the years the river changed its course many times, leaving in its wake oxbow lakes and bayous that made normal travel through the flood plain all but impossible: bogs caused loaded wagons to get stuck, exhausting draft animals and slowing travel. Finding dry space to stop for the night was a challenge, while mosquitoes and horseflies made life miserable for both people and livestock much of the year. Beyond irritation and pain, mosquitoes carried malaria, which added to the discomfort of most travelers. It did not take too many trips into Arkansas before word reached relatives and friends back east that "the Arkansas" was an unhealthy area in addition to being a quagmire for travelers.

Thus, physical geography dealt Arkansas a difficult hand. The main courses of travel by-passed the state to the north through St. Louis or to the South through Natchez or New Orleans. The region sat isolated as migration broke around the state, leaving it "an island in the stream" of westward expansion. As a result, Arkansas was populated by individuals who chose to shun the main traveled paths. They entered the region by choice rather than being carried along by the mainstream of the Anglo-American migration. This deviation from the norm was particularly appealing to settlers who valued independence and self-sufficiency above cooperation and an institutional structure.

Once in Arkansas, the natural terrain continued to pose problems for early settlers. The sloughs, swamps, and bayous that beset travelers also challenged pioneer farmers as they struggled to bring the land into cultivation. The soil was extremely fertile, but densely covered by enormous bottomland hardwood trees that shaded the ground and took months if not years to clear away in order to prepare the soil for planting. Areas not covered by forest were typically overgrown with wild cane, a type of bamboo that was equally difficult to travel through. Clearing timber usually opened the area for an invasion of this pernicious rhizome and cotton farmers long battled the cane in a competition to control the land.

The upland region of the state was free from most of the topographical problems of the delta, but there climate presented a risk. Cotton varieties in the nineteenth century required on average 220 frost-free days to be ready for harvest. The growing season in upland Arkansas might just, in good years, yield that many. But in addition to the risky climate, arable land in the region was limited primarily to narrow river valleys and lacked the economy of scale found in the cotton-rich lowland region of the state.

Adverse public policy was another factor defining the state's development. As the volume of emigration to the west increased, migrants pressed the U.S. Congress for funds to build and improve public roads. Congress had first adopted road building as policy in the 1790s when it appropriated funds to begin construction on the "National Road." Beginning in Cumberland, Maryland, the first stage of construction extended to Wheeling, West Virginia. Subsequent sessions of Congress extended the road along the north bank of the Ohio River, where the major wave of westward expansion was having its primary impact. The Erie Canal's completion in 1825 greatly increased trade and commerce between New York and the Ohio Valley and furthered stimulated migration into that region. However, as previously noted, the pattern of migration in the Ohio Valley led to most settlers bypassing Arkansas and either settling north of the state, or sweeping on toward points west.

During the 1830s, while Arkansans were preparing for statehood, Congress initiated a plan to remove the Eastern Woodland Indians. This was another policy with a negative impact on Arkansas's development. The policy's roots dated back to 1817, when federal officials tried to persuade those Indian nations east of the Mississippi River to voluntarily accept new lands in portions of the Louisiana Purchase. None of the tribes initially accepted the offer. However a number of individuals did make their way west and the executive branch moved to have them recognized by formal treaty. In 1817 a group of Cherokee, including tribal leaders, signed an agreement with the United States to accept a region between the White and Arkansas Rivers in the soon-to-be-created Arkansas Territory. The reserve was bounded on the east by a line which began at a point near today's Morrilton and extended northeast to Polk Bayou (Batesville) on the White. The western boundary began at the confluence of Lee Creek with the Arkansas (Fort Smith) and extended north to the White River near present day Harrison. Over the next ten years about 3,000 Cherokee relocated from the east to the new reserve and were recognized by federal officials as the Western Cherokee.

Soon after the Arkansas Territory was created in 1819, federal agents also negotiated a treaty with the Choctaw Nation. Known as the Treaty of Doak's Stand, the 1820 agreement created another reserve in Arkansas between the Arkansas and Red Rivers opposite the Western Cherokee Reservation. The treaty stipulated voluntary re-settlement; a decade later, fewer than 300 Choctaw had chosen to relocate on the Arkansas reservation.

However, such low numbers did not stop white Arkansans from demanding that the Choctaw reserve be moved farther west. One consequence of that demand led to an adjustment in Arkansas's western boundary that will be discussed later.

The relocation policy moved too slowly for Anglo American cotton planters in the Trans-Appalachian region. Within a decade they pressed Congress to be more persuasive in getting the Indians to move. Lawmakers responded by passing the Indian Removal Act of 1830. This legislation created a great reservation, known as the Permanent Indian Country west of the 95th Meridian (the approximate location of Arkansas's new western boundary) and changed voluntary to forced removal. The remaining Cherokee and Choctaw, as well as the Creek, Chickasaw, Seminole, and numerous smaller nations—more than 60,000 people in all—were targeted for removal to the new reserve.

The removal policy had important implications for Arkansas in at least two areas. The first concerned insuring the integrity of Indian Country: to prevent Euroamerican encroachment on Indian lands, as had happened in the east, Congress passed the Indian Intercourse Act of 1834. This law made it illegal for any non-Indian, except for specified individuals, to be in the new region. Such prohibition seriously hampered the progress of those emigrants intent on moving through Arkansas en route to the points farther west. Those migrants not re-routed by physical geography thus had an additional reason for avoiding Arkansas.

A civil war in the Cherokee Nation presented a second reason for emigrants to skirt Arkansas. The conflict broke out soon after the “eastern” Cherokee joined the “western” Cherokee in the new Indian Country. Bad feelings between the two groups festered throughout the two decades between the relocation and removal policies. When the two groups were reunited in their new homeland, hostile feelings erupted into open warfare that lasted for another decade. The conflict did not result in a large number of casualties, but rumor of war gave travelers unfamiliar with the area another reason to give Arkansas a wide berth.

Slavery dictated a third policy decision by federal officials that shaped Arkansas's development. When the U.S. House of Representatives' Committee on Territories opened hearings on the Arkansas territorial bill in February 1819, the measure was almost immediately amended to prohibit slavery in the proposed region. When additional amendments were offered, the committee could not reach a consensus and the bill was finally brought before the full House for resolution. Slavery opponents advanced a compromise measure to free slaves after they reached age 25. Slavery proponents, however, refused to accept that position and when the vote was taken the measure tied with 88 for and 88 against the amendment. The tie vote was broken by Speaker Henry Clay, who voted with the slavery advocates and the amendment was defeated. Thus by a one-vote margin, Arkansas became a slave territory with a strong bias toward becoming a slave state.

The slavery question was again raised as Arkansas moved toward statehood. In the early 1830s a new political party with strong opposition to allowing slavery to expand beyond its existing limits organized in opposition to the dominant Democratic Party. Calling themselves Whigs, leaders of the new group planned a strategy to win the presidency. Although the Whigs were soundly defeated in 1832, the slavery question caught the electorate's attention as never before. Despite the Democrats' victory, it was apparent that the new party had broad support and would be an even more difficult foe in the next presidential election. Incumbent President Andrew Jackson's decision to not seek re-election emboldened the Whigs and their confidence increased more when Jackson let it be known that his choice for a successor was his vice-president, Martin Van Buren. Van Buren, a native of New York with a significant number of Abolitionists among his constituents, presented a dilemma to the Southern wing of the party. Democratic leaders found it difficult to convince slave holders that Van Buren was sympathetic to their interests. While not prepared to vote for a Whig candidate, many Southerners expressed a willingness to "sit out" the 1836 presidential election rather than choose between two unacceptable candidates.

Democratic concern over the 1836 elections can be inferred in the activities of Ambrose Sevier, Arkansas's delegate to Congress. Following the 1832 elections a growing number of Arkansans began to lobby for statehood. Sevier, however, opposed statehood and on three occasions publicly stated that opposition. His last refusal to endorse statehood came in the November 1834 general elections. Sevier argued that the Territory lacked sufficient population to be independent and needed federal subsidies to avoid raising taxes. Sevier was re-elected but, ironically, when he returned to Washington just over a month later, he introduced a resolution calling for Congress to admit Arkansas as a state.

That Sevier reversed his position on such short notice provides evidence that Democrats were concerned about the 1836 presidential election. Most office holders vividly remembered the 1824 campaign, in which Democrats won the popular vote but failed to win a majority in the Electoral College, then lost the presidency when the House of Representatives choose John Quincy Adams over Jackson. That such could happen again was plausible, based on rumors of a Whig strategy to run three regional candidates in 1836, split the popular vote between the New England, the Ohio River Valley, and the South, and again throw the election to the House. If that strategy developed, every electoral vote was crucial; admitting Arkansas to statehood would be an advantage for the party.

Sevier's resolution was referred to the House Committee on Territories. There, it ran into trouble on two fronts. The first had to do with the minimum population required for statehood. The formula, first established in 1786 in the Northwest Ordinance under the Articles of Confederation and continued under the Constitution, specified that a region must have a minimum of 5,000 white males before it could be organized as a territory and a total white population of 60,000 before becoming a state. While there had been adjustments to the minimum headcount after Ohio was admitted in 1803, Arkansas's population posed a clear problem: it was unusually low. The 1830 census counted only 25,812 Caucasians, well below the original benchmark. Even the addition of 4,576 slaves did not give the region adequate population for consideration. The negative impact of physical geography and the public policies concerning transportation and Indian removal on Arkansas's development was evident.

The Missouri Compromise posed another potential problem to Arkansas statehood. Adopted in 1820, the Compromise established the principle that the number of slave and free states would be equal and no future states would be admitted unless that balance was maintained. The agreement further stated that slavery was banned from the original Louisiana Purchase north of Missouri. If strictly adhered to, the only areas for new slave states were Arkansas and Florida and both would have to wait until there was a free territory ready for statehood.

Apparently this latter point caught Sevier's attention when he returned to Washington in December 1834. Rumors were sweeping thorough the capital that Michigan Territory was preparing for statehood. To prevent that region from being paired with Florida, Sevier felt he had to act quickly. However his argument lacked credibility. Florida had so few white settlers that it was not enumerated in the 1830 census and in 1834 the U.S. Army was still trying to extract the Seminole Indians from the area and move them to Indian Territory. Although it had been organized as a Territory in 1821, in reality Florida was even less prepared than Arkansas to become a state. Of greater importance was the rumor of Whig strategy for the 1836 presidential campaign. But whatever the reason, the House Committee on Territories took Sevier's resolution for Arkansas statehood under consideration.

In testifying before the committee, Sevier pointed out that despite the low population reported by the 1830 census, settlement was expanding rapidly in the region and would accelerate even more if it became a state. To verify Sevier's claim, the Committee ordered that a sheriff's census be taken. That enumeration, undertaken in 1835, reported Arkansas's population at 52,240. This confirmed Sevier's testimony about rapid settlement and also satisfied the Democratic members of the Committee who were anxious to confer statehood in time to participate in the 1836 elections.

The Democratic Party's efforts to stifle Whig election strategy worked. Even though Van Buren only won 50.8% of the popular vote, he won a majority of the electoral vote, including three from Arkansas and three from Michigan. Ironically, neither the new President nor the new state fared well over the next four years. Van Buren took his oath of office even as an economic recession, that would become a five-year depression, swept the nation. During this time, Arkansas tried to finance a state banking system by pledging the state's full faith and credit to cover more than $3 million in bonds. However, the state's small population did not include enough "men of wealth" to purchase the bonds, and with the collapse of the national economy, it was all but impossible to attract outside investors. As a result, Arkansas began to accumulate a debt almost from the beginning of its young life. The state could neither redeem the few bonds that had been sold nor pay the interest on the outstanding bonds. Debt both stunted Arkansas's early growth and continued to plague its citizens for the next hundred years.

The statehood issue illustrates the importance of historical timing, the third factor shaping Arkansas's development. When Congress created Arkansas Territory in 1819, its boundaries extended from the Mississippi River to the 100th Meridian between the 33rd and 36th parallels. It was a huge political unit at the time, encompassing more than 100,000 square miles. Congress took such action in part to compensate for the swamplands along the Mississippi River and the mountainous Ozark-Ouachita region; neither was considered good farm land. Protecting the southern border of the Louisiana Purchase, however, was an even greater concern for lawmakers. The U.S. acquired the Louisiana Territory without knowing its exact boundaries. Defining the purchase as a territory became a priority after the War of 1812.

The United States opened serious negotiations with Spain in 1817 in an effort to reach closure on how much territory they had purchased with Louisiana. Secretary of State John Quincy Adams and Spanish Foreign Minister Luis de Onís finally reached agreement on the new boundaries and signed a treaty on February 22, 1819.

The Adams-Onís negotiations were going on at the same time as the House Committee on Territories' debate to create Arkansas Territory. The Committee reached consensus to recommend approval of the resolution to the full House on March 2, 1819. Aware that Spain was pressing hard to claim as much of the Texas province as possible, House members agreed not only to approve the new territory, but to make it more than twice the size of any state east of the Mississippi River. Arkansas was to serve as an anchor of the Southwestern frontier, an outpost from which to watch for foreign encroachment on the remaining unorganized portions of the Louisiana Purchase.

With respect to timing, twenty months after Arkansas Territory was created, federal officials reached agreement with the Choctaw Indians to exchange land in the east for a comparable region in the west. As previously noted, the 1820 Treaty of Doak's Stand carved out more than fifteen million acres in the recently-created Arkansas Territory. Predictably, Anglo Arkansians protested loudly and repeatedly against Indians taking land only recently assigned to the region's white settlers. While those complaints were being recorded in Washington, word came that Mexico had successfully overthrown Spanish colonial rule and the United States officially recognized the new Republic of Mexico in August 1821.

A threat of Mexican encroachment on the Louisiana Territory was considerably less than that posed by Spain. Thus, the need for a sentinel state was much reduced. Moreover, the need to accommodate the Choctaw Nation's request for new lands became more flexible. Based on the timing of these diplomatic events, the Arkansas Territory lost more than half of its land, from approximately 120,000 square miles to just over 53,000 square miles, less than five years after it was created. Had Mexican independence not occurred when it did, or had the need to reserve suitable treaty lands for the Choctaw not diminished, Arkansas territory might well have enjoyed its "super size" for decades, and might have retained it into statehood. Had it entered the Union with the full 120,000 square miles, the added land and resources of ultimately what became Oklahoma might have made the state a strong contender for economic growth and development.

The ramifications of Arkansas's premature admission to the Union and the banking issues were magnified during Arkansas's first decade as a state. Within a year after statehood, the nation was plunged into the Panic of 1837, the most serious economic recession to that point in the nation's history. Selling bonds in a new frontier state would have been difficult under the best of circumstances; finding buyers in such a stressful time proved all but impossible. The poor economic conditions lasted for more than five years, much too long for a new state that had had little time to build up a reserve. Arkansas's economy did not fully recover until after the Mexican War in 1846, but then only enjoyed a decade of prosperity before Civil War armies devastated the state's economy and destroyed much of its infrastructure.

The formative influences in Arkansas history were established by the time of the Civil War. Over the next 150 years the state's culture continued to evolve. However, the independent spirit established by the pioneer settlers who chose to leave the main currents of westward expansion persisted until modern times. These individuals preferred to live in relative isolation among family and friends and eschewed institutional development with its needs for revenue (taxes) and regulation (law). They preferred their own way to national norms and were reluctant to embrace development that extended beyond their local communities. Being off the "beaten path" of migration, being pushed into statehood before its limited population was ready to take on the responsibilities of sovereignty, and having to establish institutions during adverse times created a tension in Arkansas between the institutionalists wanting to develop the region and the individualists who valued their autonomy more than the progress of development.

THE PEOPLE'S HOUSE, GOVERNMENT'S HOME: A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE ARKANSAS CAPITOL

David Ware

For most Arkansans, the most potent symbol of their state government is the Capitol, a monumental neo-classical structure which stands just west of downtown Little Rock. It is the seat of the state's government, housing its legislature as well as the staff of six out of Arkansas's seven constitutional officers. Built over the course of fifteen years, the Capitol provoked intense controversy during its construction. Its completion was delayed time after time by bad luck, short funds and political maneuvering. The project helped send one state senator to jail and exposed deep divisions within the state's ruling party. Two-thirds of the way through the project, the Capitol's designer was removed and a new architect was brought in to "restore and complete" the Capitol. Despite these adversities, what emerged was a distinctive, elegant structure whose balanced proportions, spare ornamentation and solid underpinnings have aged gracefully.

The Capitol is the second purpose-built seat of state government built in Little Rock. The first, the State House, was erected in the late 1830s between Markham Street and the banks of the Arkansas River. From its first occupation in 1836, this handsome, stuccoed-brick, Greek Revival structure demanded constant maintenance and revision. Over the decades the State House was modified to better accommodate the small but growing state bureaucracy, but limited funds kept the structure from looking its best; an 1879 newspaper story described it as "a shabby brown stucco and brick building."

During the 1880s, some long-needed improvements, including roof repairs, were undertaken but there was never enough money to cover all upkeep needs; the building remained a dilapidated, undersized seat of government. In 1895, the steam heating system failed altogether; lacking money for a new boiler, Secretary of State H.B. Armistead installed heating stoves. More and better space was clearly needed but due to the grounds having been hemmed in by development, it was an unlikely candidate for expansion.

Gradually, support grew among Arkansas legislators and prominent citizens for a new capitol in the face of powerful restraints. Sentiment and financial considerations, coupled with the lack of a suitable site, effectively blocked discussion of a replacement for the State House. By the end of the century the state's financial condition finally improved. At the State House, on the other hand, things got worse. The roof, which had been a source of concern to several secretaries of state, ultimately provided catalyst for change: On January 12, 1899, after heavy rains, the porous roof led to large pieces of ceiling plaster falling in the Senate chamber. On January 13, 1899, Senate Concurrent Resolution 2 was introduced, asserting that a new capitol was needed and creating a joint committee to investigate such an undertaking.

Governor Daniel Webster Jones lent his support to the bill when he addressed a joint session of the Assembly on January 18. He suggested that the new Capitol be built on the site of the state penitentiary on Fifth Street (Jones described the site as “too valuable” to be the home of the prison). After one month of deliberation and amendment, the House adopted the resolution and Governor Jones signed it into law on February 13, 1899. Act 128, as it became, allocated $50,000 to hire an architect and begin the project. It also stipulated a total cost for the envisioned capitol not to exceed one million dollars, sited the capitol on the grounds of the state penitentiary at the west end of Fifth Street, made 200 convicts available to work on the capitol project, and created an appointive commission to oversee the construction. The choice of location removed an undesirable feature from a developing residential neighborhood; the prison board was instructed to move its equipment and operations to a new site on the outskirts of town, except for the convicts who would labor on the Capitol.

The Capitol Commissioners first met in early May. Their first major step was to hire St. Louis architect George R. Mann as the capitol’s architect. The choice was not random. In early January, before the session convened, Mann had set up a large watercolor of a hypothetical capitol building in Governor Jones’s office and also made available drawings of his competition-winning designs for the Montana state capitol (ultimately built to other architects’ plans). During the session the drawings increased legislators’ enthusiasm for the project, while Mann’s estimates that a handsome building could be erected for $650,000 to $1 million reassured them that big dreams need not beggar the state.

During May and June the site was surveyed and the boundaries of the new building were laid out. The Capitol’s footprint was nearly 500 feet long, centered on a north-south axis within the penitentiary walls. Ground was broken on July 4, 1899, and serious earth moving began late in the month, as convict work crews supervised by builder and Capitol Commissioner George Donaghey excavated the cellar and prepared the foundation. Concrete foundations were poured using crushed rock and brick from demolished prison structures as aggregate. Despite delays caused by a shortage of suitable convict laborers, as well as unexpected quicksand, the foundation was essentially complete by late October 1900, and the capitol’s cornerstone was laid on November 27, 1900.

Construction slowed after this auspicious beginning. The Capitol was to be a “pay-as-you-go” project, but construction funds (raised by a property tax increase) were slow to accumulate, so the Legislative Assembly doled out funds slowly. The choice of materials likewise slowed work: the hard native limestone selected for the Capitol’s exterior wore out quarry equipment prematurely and the quarry’s owners were accused of filling lucrative private orders before attending to their Capitol contracts, as well as supplying inferior stone for the Capitol’s upper stories.

Other significant delays came from political opposition. The Capitol project’s chief foe was Jeff Davis of Yell County. Davis opposed the project from its inception; as attorney general in 1899 he had sued the Capitol Commission, trying to stop construction. He had ultimately failed but staked out a position against the project, on grounds of a very strict interpretation of the state constitution and appeals to concern over the state’s funds. Campaigning for the governor’s office in 1900, Davis whipped up public distrust of the Capitol undertaking in speeches around the state. Addressing scores of rural audiences, Davis successfully portrayed himself as a defender of financial responsibility and the friend of the common man, contrasted with the moneyed Little Rock interests allegedly behind the Capitol project. Elected governor, Davis ironically became the ex-officio chair of the Commission. David told the 1901 Legislature that he was not fundamentally opposed to the Capitol but recommended the firing of George Mann and the principal contractors, the Caldwell & Drake Company of Indianapolis, and if necessary the abandonment of the entire project. In late April 1901, the Legislature adopted a compromise measure to continue the project and Davis signed it into law; a few days later, the governor announced the membership of the new Capitol Commission, composed of Davis stalwarts.

Over the next few years progress on the Capitol proceeded by fits and starts, with delays caused by materials availability, a slow revenue stream and political infighting. In 1905, concerns raised over alleged shortcuts in construction seemed to support Davis's criticisms. In the spring of that year, a major new Capitol appropriation bill passed in the Senate but died in the House. Four state senators and two representatives were indicted that summer for accepting bribes in connection with the bill. Ultimately, only Senator Frank Butt was convicted of accepting money from contractor Caldwell & Drake, some of which he then used to offer a bribe to fellow senator R. R. Adams to vote for an $800,000 appropriation.

While controversy and bribery accusations swirled, construction continued; during 1905 and 1906, Caldwell & Drake effectively worked on credit in the absence of new appropriations. Their legal troubles were, however, not ended. In the summer of 1906, new allegations of shoddy workmanship and substandard materials were leveled against Caldwell & Drake. Tests indicated otherwise, but public suspicions had been raised. Former Capitol Commissioner George Donaghey publically criticized George Mann for having authorized money-saving changes to his original specifications without Commission approval. Even after Jeff Davis took a seat in the United States Senate in January of 1907, trouble persisted: construction slowed to a standstill by mid-1907 after the failure of yet another appropriation bill. The uncompleted Capitol was predicted to become "the habitat of owls and bats."

In 1908, the Capitol project became the focus of the Arkansas gubernatorial race. All contenders stated their intention to finish the Capitol but former Capitol Commissioner George Donaghey seemed most likely and eager to accomplish the job. Elected with a comfortable majority, Donaghey took office in 1909 ready to rekindle the work. At his urging, the Legislature appropriated money to continue construction and the Capitol Commissioners dismissed Caldwell & Drake. In June the commissioners, led by Donaghey, took possession of the uncompleted building in the name of the state. George Mann was allowed to resign from the job; in his place the Commissioners hired Cass Gilbert, the New York-based architect of the Minnesota State Capitol and other noted buildings, as well as president of the American Institute of Architects. Gilbert visited Little Rock in June, inspected the Capitol worksite, conferred with George Mann and, on June 27, took on the task of restoring and completing the Capitol. Work tearing out defective construction soon began.

This bold action prompted a flurry of injunctions, lawsuits, and countersuits; but while arguments were advanced in court, work on the building accelerated. Convicts broke out plaster walls and cement floors and removed deficient fireproofing. By February 1910, the Capitol's inadequate iron and steel work was reinforced, fireproofing was improved and new reinforced concrete floors were poured. Mann's original metal-covered dome design was abandoned in favor of a limestone-built one which closely resembled that of the Mississippi State Capitol (which feature, it was later revealed, had also been designed by George Mann). Plans for statuary to crown the dome, rotunda towers, and north and south pediments were also scrapped, saving money while simplifying the building's neo-classical silhouette. Bronze doors from Tiffany's of New York replaced planned iron portals on the Capitol's east face. By December 1910, the building was unfinished but deemed by Donaghey and the Commission ready for occupation. On January 8, 1911, over the protests of the Secretary of State, wagons brought the first loads of furniture and files from the State House to the new Capitol. The Attorney General's office was the first to set up for business in the new Capitol, with the Governor's staff following close behind. The Legislative Assembly met there on January 9, 1911, and has done so since that day.

The Capitol's construction had, up to this point, involved failed appropriations bills, political upsets, and changes to the building's design. Hence, it was no surprise that when the Assembly met in January 1911 in the new building, many details remained unfinished: it lacked permanent plants for heating and light and much of the interior was finished in tile and plaster. In spite of Donaghey's best efforts, the legislature failed to approve adequate appropriations for the project. Work continued, although at a slower pace.

In 1912, Donaghey was defeated in his bid for a third term by Joseph T. Robinson, who removed Donaghey from the Capitol Commission. Ironically, one of Robinson's campaign themes was that Donaghey had not fully lived up to his 1908 promise to complete the Capitol. Robinson, however, resigned the governorship in order to enter the U.S. Senate in early 1913; his successor, acting Governor Junius Marion Futtrell, reappointed Donaghey to the Commission. Additionally, the legislature of 1913 appropriated more than $500,000 to pay already-incurred construction costs and to finish the Capitol.

With money available, Gilbert was able to substantially revise the Capitol's interior. Items specified to meet a tight budget were now upgraded. Eight offices were added to the ground floor. Marble replaced lesser materials throughout the building. Corridors were lined with marble wainscots and floors from Vermont, while the grand staircases to the House and Senate were rebuilt in Alabama marble. Fluted columns of Yule marble from Colorado replaced scagliola-covered masonry supports around the rotunda and above the grand staircases.

Four murals furnished by Fayetteville artist Paul Heerwagen were installed in alcoves above the grand staircases; Heerwagen also applied the decorative paint finishes throughout the building. Landscaping was begun and an outside heating plant was equipped. By January 1, 1915, the Capitol building was essentially complete. George Donaghey estimated the final cost of the project at slightly more than $2.2 million. The final Capitol Commission dissolved in January 1917, after claims and counterclaims involving Caldwell & Drake were finally settled.

The Arkansas Capitol looks today much as it did in 1915. Its neo-classical revival design combines elements of Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian styles. It measures 440 feet along its north-south axis, and just over 190 feet from east to west.

Exterior walls of Batesville limestone are surmounted by a slightly conical dome built of softer Indiana limestone. Two hundred and thirteen feet separate ground level from the top of the gilded lantern cupola. Inside, the building contains nearly 287,000 square feet of space, no longer sufficient to hold the majority of state offices and departments.

A complex of office buildings around the Capitol reflects the twentieth-century growth of Arkansas bureaucracy. In 1958, the state Supreme Court relocated to the adjacent Justice Building, and today, the Attorney General's office is located in downtown Little Rock. The Legislature and six of Arkansas's constitutional officers, however, remain firmly based in the Capitol. Extensive restorations in recent years have returned the Old Supreme Court Chamber, the Governor's Reception Room, the Senate Chamber, and the Rotunda to nearly their original appearance while preserving their utility as places where public business is transacted. Cass Gilbert's expansive (and expensive) suggestions for historical murals to cover the walls were never carried out but gubernatorial portraits and memorial busts of prominent Arkansans have joined the Heerwagen murals as the Capitol's public art offerings.

Outside, recent restoration of the Capitol's stonework has effaced decades' worth of discoloration and erosion while stabilizing pieces loosened by the effects of pressure and weather. Over the years successive revisions and replanting altered the appearance of the Capitol's grounds, but recent projects have restored long-disappeared elements of the original grounds plan developed by landscape architect Frank Blaisdell, including the pylons flanking the east promenade.

The Secretary of State serves as manager and guardian of the Capitol and its grounds. Each year, the Capitol is visited by thousands, young and old alike. Some visit on official business, or out of curiosity, in hopes of learning something of how their state government works, or simply to walk through a distinctive and elegant structure. For some a visit runs long at fifteen minutes, while for others three hours or more may not suffice. The Capitol welcomes them all; its combination of rich materials and austere ornamentation lends it a timeless quality. Born of necessity and built in controversy, the People's House of Arkansas has proved itself to be solid and tasteful and something more than the sum of its parts: a graceful, durable, and well-loved masterpiece.

UNITED STATES SENATOR
Blanche Lincoln

Blanche Lambert Lincoln (born September 30, 1960) is the Democratic senior United States Senator from the State of Arkansas. When first elected in 1998 she was the youngest woman ever elected to that body; as of 2008, she is also the youngest Senior Senator in the Senate.

Lincoln was born in Helena (Phillips County), attended public schools and graduated from Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Lynchburg, Virginia, in 1982. After graduating she took a job as staff assistant to 1st District Congressman Bill Alexander and served in his office until 1984. She defeated her former boss in the Democratic primary of 1992 and took his seat in the House. She was reelected to a second term under her married name, Blanche Lincoln, and served in the House of Representatives until 1997.

In 1998, Lincoln sought and won the Senate seat being vacated by Dale Bumpers. In the Senate, Lincoln has concentrated primarily on issues involving farmers and rural issues. She is one of the primary advocates of the Delta Regional Authority (DRA), which is charged with furthering development in the lower Mississippi Delta region. She is also the Chair of Rural Outreach for the Senate Democratic Caucus. She serves on several key committees, including Finance and the Senate Social Security Task Force.

Senator Lincoln has chosen a centrist or moderate course, differing with her party's leadership on key votes and issues; she is usually identified with the "Blue Dog" coalition of Democratic fiscal conservatives. On the Senate floor, Lincoln uses the same desk once occupied by Senator Hattie Caraway of Jonesboro, Arkansas's first woman senator.

Senator Lincoln and her husband, Dr. Steve Lincoln, are the parents of twin boys, Reece and Bennett.

UNITED STATES SENATOR
Mark Pryor

Mark Lunsford Pryor is Arkansas's Democratic junior United States Senator. He was born in Fayetteville (Washington County) in 1963 and grew up there and in Washington, D.C.; his father is former state legislator, governor and U.S. Senator David Pryor.

Pryor is a graduate of the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, earning degrees in history and law from that institution. After graduation from law school in 1988 he went into private practice, and in 1990 ran successfully for a seat in the Arkansas House of Representatives. He served two terms, returned to his law practice, but in 1998 successfully sought the office of Arkansas Attorney General. During his tenure, Pryor advocated strengthening laws against drunk drivers and legislation to protect children on the Internet and prohibit unwanted telemarketing calls. His department implemented the Morgan Nick Alert System, which helps to locate missing and exploited children.

In 2002, Pryor campaigned for and won the Senate seat held until 1996 by David Pryor, who actively campaigned for his son. Mark Pryor proved to be the only Democratic candidate for the Senate to defeat a Republican incumbent in that election cycle.

In the Senate, Pryor has served on six committees and numerous subcommittees, including the Senate Ethics Committee and the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee. In his first term Pryor introduced legislation requiring timely notification of military casualties' families, as well as securing funding for various projects and programs in Arkansas. In May 2005, Pryor was one of a bipartisan group of fourteen senators who forged a compromise on use of the judicial filibuster, thus averting drastic action by the practice's opponents. Senator Pryor faced no Republican opposition in the 2008 election, testifying to the solidity of his support in the home districts.

Mark Pryor, his wife Jill and their two sons, Adams and Porter, reside in Little Rock.

UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE

Marion Berry

District 1

Marion Berry has represented Arkansas's First Congressional District since 1997. Berry, born in 1942, grew up in the Bayou Meto community near DeWitt (Arkansas County). He received a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Arkansas College of Pharmacy in 1965. He was a pharmacist in North Little Rock and from 1968 to 2005 farmed rice and soybeans on the family farm in Gillett, Arkansas.

Berry was a member of the Gillett City Council from 1977 to 1980. From 1986 to 1994 he served on the Arkansas Soil and Water Conservation Commission, and in 1992 was selected by his colleagues to chair the commission. Berry served as the Special Assistant to the President for Agricultural Trade and Food Assistance in 1993, and in 1996 sought and won the congressional seat representing his home district.

As a member of the House Agriculture Committee from 1997-2002, Berry promoted the interests of family farmers across the country, and in particular those of his district. He was instrumental in passing the 2002 Farm Bill and, citing the enormous economic benefits that the Arkansas farm economy would reap, Berry has also been an outspoken supporter of re-opening trade with Cuba. In 2006, Congressman Berry also received the Harvey W. McGeorge Award from the Pine Bluff Rotary Club for his accomplishments in agriculture.

In 2003, Berry was appointed to the House Appropriations Committee, and he serves on the Military Construction and Veterans Affairs, Energy and Water, and Transportation subcommittees. He was also chosen by Democratic leadership to serve as Vice-Chair of the Steering and Policy Committee and as a member of the Leader's Senior Whip Team.

Representative Berry and his wife Carolyn celebrated their 46th wedding anniversary in August 2008. The Berrys have two children and four grandchildren and live in Arkansas County.

UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE

Vic Snyder

District 2

Victor F. (Vic) Snyder represents Arkansas's Second Congressional District. He was born in Medford, Oregon, in 1947 and attended college at Willamette University in Salem, Oregon. In 1967, after two years of college, Snyder volunteered for the United States Marine Corps. He served in Vietnam, attaining the rank of corporal. Snyder earned a degree in chemistry in 1975 from Willamette and earned his medical degree from the University of Oregon Health Sciences Center in 1979.

Snyder served his residency at the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences. After completing his residency in 1982, he worked as a family practice physician for 15 years. During this time he travelled overseas to volunteer his medical services at refugee camps in Thailand, Honduras and the Sudan. From 1985 to 1988 Snyder attended the University of Arkansas at Little Rock School of Law to obtain his law degree while maintaining his medical practice.

In 1990 he successfully ran for the Arkansas legislature and served in that body until 1996. He was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1996 and was reelected in 1998, 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, and 2008. Snyder focuses on many traditionally progressive issues, including a particular interest in support for veterans' and military families; he serves on the House Committee on Veteran's Affairs and the House Armed Services Committee. Snyder also serves on the House Subcommittees on Health and Military Personnel, and chairs the House Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee.

Snyder married the Rev. Betsy Singleton, a United Methodist minister, in 2003. They have four sons: Penn, born in 2006, and triplets Aubrey, Wyatt, and Sullivan, born in 2008.

UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE
John Boozman
District 3

Congressman John Boozman, an optometrist and rancher, represents the Third District of Arkansas in the United States House of Representatives.

A native of Fort Smith (Sebastian County), Boozman played football for the University of Arkansas while completing his pre-optometry requirements. He graduated from the Southern College of Optometry in 1977 and entered private practice in Rogers.

Boozman was elected to Congress in a 2001 special election. He was unopposed in 2002, won re-election in 2004, 2006 and again in 2008. Prior to his congressional service Boozman served two terms on the Rogers School Board, established the low vision program at the Arkansas School for the Blind in Little Rock and worked as a volunteer optometrist at an area clinic that provided medical services to low-income families. Boozman successfully raised Polled Hereford cattle that were competitive in the show ring, as well as in bull testing at Oklahoma State University.

In the 108th and 109th Congresses, Boozman served as an Assistant Whip. Boozman was also named to the Speaker's Task Force for a Drug-Free America in 2003. In May 2004, Rep. Boozman was appointed by the Speaker of the House to the House Policy Committee.

Boozman currently serves on three House committees: Veterans Affairs, Transportation & Infrastructure and Foreign Affairs. In the 109th Congress, he was appointed Chairman of the Veterans Affairs Economic Opportunity Subcommittee, which focuses on ensuring veterans have a smooth transition to civilian life. In the 110th Congress, Boozman returns as a leader of the subcommittee, this time as the group's ranking member. In February of 2008 Boozman was named ranking member of the Water Resources and Environment Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over water resources development, conservation and management, water pollution control, water infrastructure, and hazardous waste cleanup.

Boozman, 57, is married to the former Cathy Marley. The couple has three daughters.

UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE

Mike Ross

District 4

Mike Ross of Prescott was first elected to the United States Congress in 2000 representing Arkansas's Fourth District. Ross was born in Texarkana (Miller County) in 1961, the son of public school educators. He graduated from Hope High School and the University of Arkansas at Little Rock.

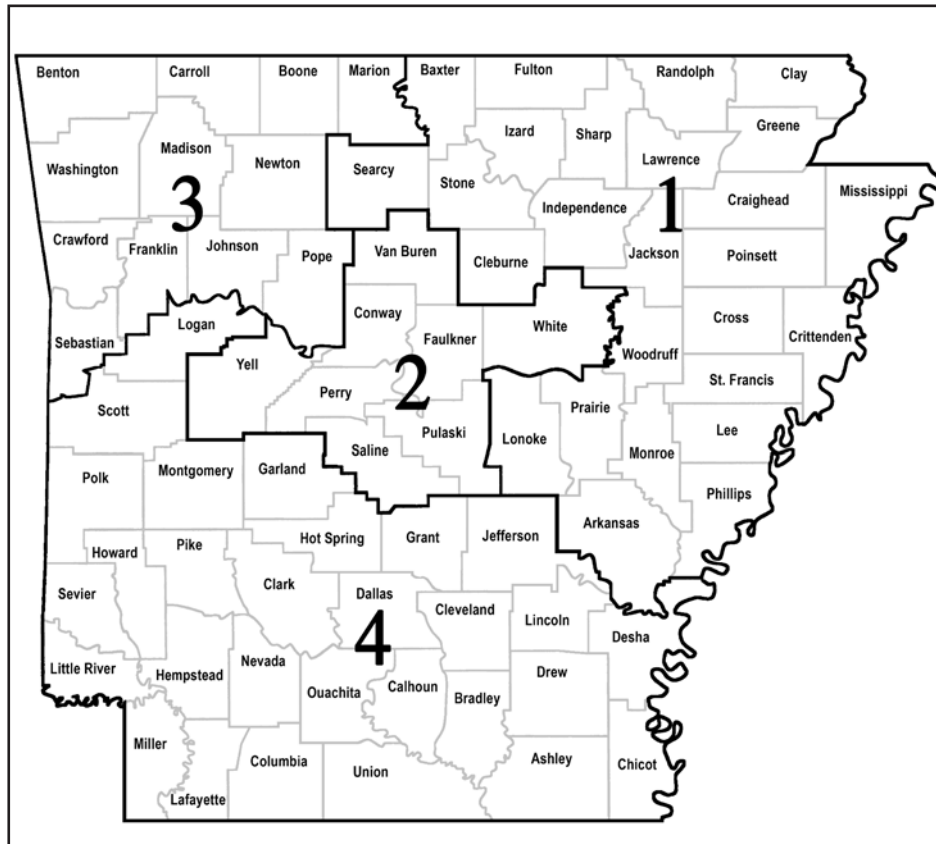

From 1985 through 1989 Ross served on the lieutenant governor's staff. In 1990 he was elected to the Arkansas State Senate, where he served for ten years. In the 2000 Congressional election, he was the only Democrat outside of California to defeat a Republican incumbent. In the 2004 and 2008 elections, the Republican Party did not run a challenger against him. Ross has been appointed to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce and the House Committee on Science and Technology. Ross was also appointed by Speaker Nancy Pelosi to serve on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's Parliamentary Assembly (NATO-PA), where he represents the United States at meetings of the 26 NATO-member countries. Ross is a member of the "Blue Dog" Coalition, a group of fiscally conservative Democratic members of congress and has been selected by his colleagues to serve as the coalition's Co-Chair for Communications.

In 2005, Ross was named Citizen of the Year in his hometown by the Prescott-Nevada County Chamber of Commerce. That same year, he also received the Distinguished Citizen Award from the DeSoto Area Council Boy Scouts of America. He is married to the former Holly Hempen of Texarkana. They have two children, Sydney and Alex.

STATE REPRESENTATION

At statehood, Arkansas's population merited a single member in the US House of Representatives. As the state grew, so did its delegation. In 1850 and 1860 Arkansas added seats; by 1875 Little Rock returned an additional Representative "at large" and in 1880 one more district was added. 1890 and 1900 saw additional seats awarded so from 1903 to 1950 the state elected seven Representatives. Postwar population decline led a seat being lost in 1950 and two more in 1962, leaving Arkansas with four congressional districts

¹⁸ Thomas Carmichael Hindman, Dist. 1, and E. W. Gantt, Dist. 2 were elected but prevented from taking their seat because of the Civil War.

¹⁹ During the first session of the (Murphy) legislature of 1864, Elisha Baxter (May 2, 1864), W. M. Fishback (May 5, 1864), and W. D. Snow (December 30, 1864), were respectively elected to the Senate for terms ending March 4, 1867. None of them were admitted. Charles B. Mitchell and Robert W. Johnson, in 1861, were elected Confederate States Senators and served as such. Mitchell died September 18, 1864, and A. H. Garland was elected to fill his vacancy. Johnson and Garland served until the fall of the Confederacy. John T. Jones and Andrew Hunter were elected Senators by the legislature in 1866. Hunter resigned and A. H. Garland was elected. All were denied admission by the Senate.

²⁰ James M. Johnson, T. M. Jacks, and Anthony A. C. Rogers presented credentials as members-elect, but their claims were not finally disposed of. By resolution of March 3, 1865, each was allowed the sum of $2,000 for "compensation, expenses, and mileage."

CHAPTER THREE: EXECUTIVE BRANCH

GOVERNOR Mike Beebe	60
LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR Bill Halter	62
SECRETARY OF STATE Charlie Daniels	64
ATTORNEY GENERAL Dustin McDaniel	66
STATE TREASURER Martha Shoffner	68
STATE AUDITOR Jim Wood	70
LAND COMMISSIONER Mark Wilcox	72
HISTORICAL ROSTER	74

THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Arkansas's system of government has much in common with those developed and adopted by the original states and the federal government. It is based on the principle of dividing authority among three branches – executive, legislative and judiciary – which in theory and, largely, in practice has thwarted imbalances of power favoring any single branch or individual.

The executive branch, headed by the governor in his or her role of chief executive, is responsible for administering the laws written and enacted by the legislative branch. The positions of governor, secretary of state, treasurer, and auditor of state represent continuations of appointive positions established during the territorial period (1819-1836). Other positions have been added to the constitutional officers' roster over time. In the state's first decades, of these only the governor was elected by the people; the others were elected in a joint session of the Legislative Assembly. This system was ended by a reform embodied in the Constitution of 1868, then reaffirmed in the Constitution of 1874: such officers would henceforth be chosen by the full electorate. Currently, seven constitutional officers or executives are elected statewide; they serve terms of four years. Of the seven, six maintain offices in the Capitol, while the attorney general's office is located in a downtown Little Rock office tower.

In addition to the state's constitutional officers, there are literally dozens of executive branch departments, agencies, boards and commissions that supervise, advise, administer and regulate in accordance with enacted laws, rules and regulations.

GOVERNOR
Mike Beebe

Mike Beebe was sworn in as the State of Arkansas's forty-fifth governor on January 9, 2007. Born in Amagon (Jackson County) in 1946, Beebe earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Arkansas State University in Jonesboro in 1968 and completed law school at the University of Arkansas in 1972, while serving in the U.S. Army Reserves.

He practiced law in Searcy in White County for ten years after his graduation from law school. In 1982, he was honored as the state's outstanding trial lawyer. That same year, Beebe began his political career with a race for the state Senate, which he won. During twenty years' service in the Senate, Beebe won respect for his fiscal realism, low-keyed consensus-building and willingness to cross party lines to build support for key legislative measures. During his final session, Beebe was elected Senate president pro tempore.

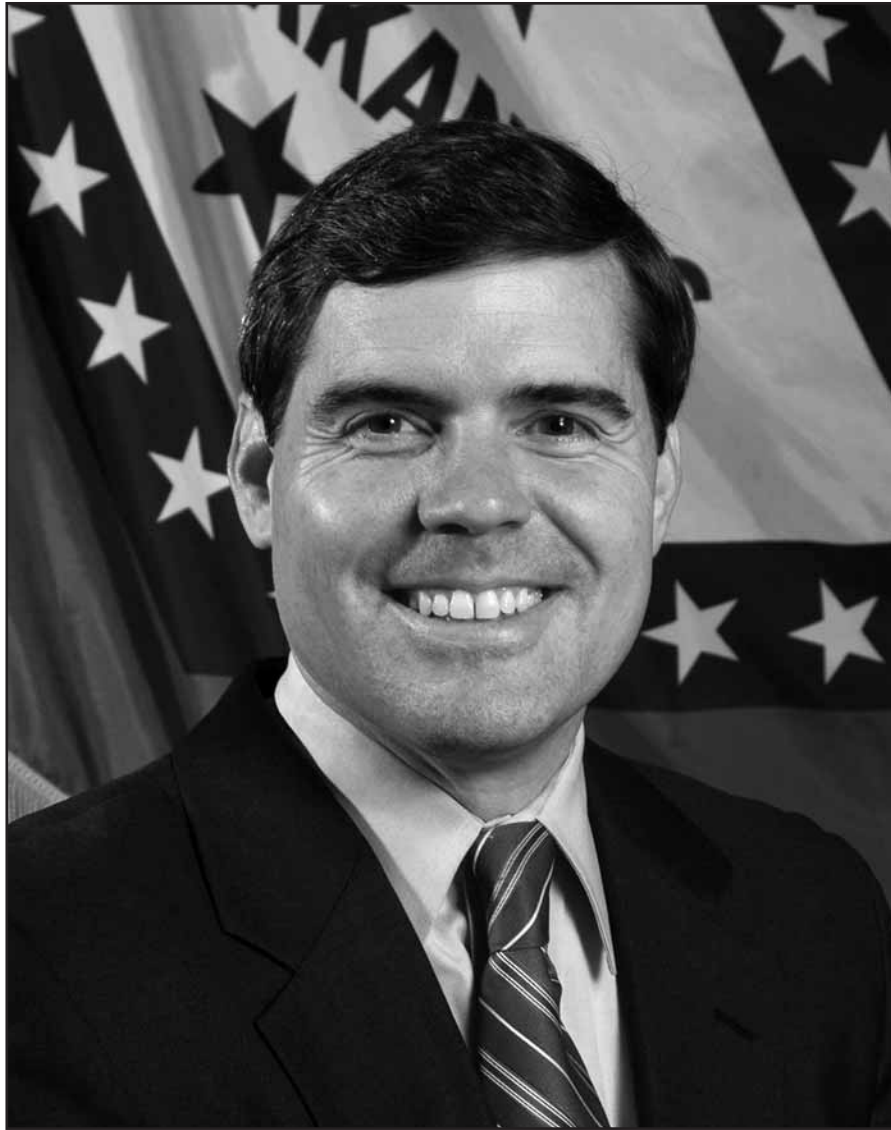

In 2002, Beebe was elected the state's fifty-first attorney general, and in the summer of 2005 he announced that he would be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor in 2006. His campaign emphasized a mixture of progressivism on economic issues and traditionalism on cultural ones. On November 7, 2006, Beebe won election with a large majority. During his first two years in office, Beebe promoted or supported successful bids to cut grocery sales taxes and to raise the state's severance tax rates on oil and natural gas.

Beebe and Ginger, his wife of twenty-eight years, have three children and five grandchildren.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

The post of governor was included in Arkansas's Constitution of 1836, an elected continuation of the appointive territorial office. The governor is the head of the executive branch of state government and thus directs policies for state agencies. By issuing executive orders, the governor implements or gives administrative effect to provisions of law. The governor proposes legislation, exercises authority over the Arkansas National Guard, may grant clemencies, pardons and commutations, and appoints members to boards of state agencies and commissions.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR
William A. Halter

Born in 1961 and raised in North Little Rock (Pulaski County), Bill Halter was valedictorian of the Little Rock Catholic High School graduating class of 1979. He is a fourth-generation Arkansan. His father ran a small business; his mother was a nurse.

The lieutenant governor studied economics and politics as a National Merit Scholar and Harry S. Truman Scholar at Stanford University, where he earned an A.B. degree with honors and distinction. He is also a Rhodes Scholar, with a Master of Philosophy degree from Oxford University in England, received in 1986.

In the private sector, Halter advised corporate executives from far-reaching industries while working as a management consultant with McKinsey and Company. He also co-wrote a study on the management practices of successful companies.

Halter served as an economist for the congressional Joint Economic Committee and as Chief Economist for the Senate Finance Committee. He joined the Clinton administration in 1993, working with the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) in the Executive Office of the President. In 1999, Halter was confirmed as deputy commissioner of Social Security.

Today, Halter is trustee emeritus of Stanford University, his alma mater. He also serves on Stanford's Humanities and Sciences Council as well as on the Advisory Council for Stanford University Libraries. He is a member of the National Advisory Board of Friends for Youth, which matches at-risk youngsters with adult mentors. Mr. Halter and his wife, Shanti, have two daughters, Lauren and Julia.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

The office of lieutenant governor originated in the Constitution of 1864 but was eliminated with the adoption of the Constitution of 1874. The office was re-created by Amendment 6 to the Arkansas Constitution. Although Arkansas voters narrowly approved the amendment in 1914, the speaker of the house declared the results invalid because the initiative had failed to win votes equal to a majority of the highest total number of votes cast in that year. This opinion was widely accepted, hence the state lacked a lieutenant governor until 1926, when the state Supreme Court ruled that a majority of those voting on a specific ballot question was sufficient for its passage.

The lieutenant governor is one of seven constitutional officers. He or she acts as governor when the state's chief executive is absent from the state or is otherwise unable to carry out the responsibilities of the office. The lieutenant governor is the first in line to succeed the governor in the event of impeachment, removal from office or death.

The lieutenant governor presides over the Arkansas Senate during the biennial legislative session, as well as during any special sessions. He or she can cast a vote in the 35-member Senate, but only when such is needed to break a tie.

SECRETARY OF STATE
Charlie Daniels

Charlie Daniels serves as Arkansas's 32nd secretary of state. Prior to assuming office as secretary of state, Daniels served as Arkansas's state land commissioner for 18 years.

A native of El Dorado (Union County), Daniels served in the United States Air Force and the Air Force Reserves. Daniels first began his political career on the Parker's Chapel School Board. He was appointed by Governor David Pryor to directorship of the Arkansas Department of Labor; he was re-appointed to that position by Governor Bill Clinton. Daniels later worked for the Arkansas Electric Cooperatives, before he ran for state land commissioner.

As secretary of state, Daniels serves as chair of both the State Board of Election Commissioners and the Capitol Arts and Grounds Commission. He is a member of the Information Network of Arkansas Board and the State Board of Apportionment. Daniels has also served as chair of the Natural Resources Committee and the Arkansas Natural and Cultural Resources Council. Daniels has been active in professional public service organizations, including the Western States Land Commissioners Association. He currently serves the National Association of Secretaries of States as its Southern Region vice president.

Daniels currently lives in Bryant. He was married to the late Patricia Ann Burlison Daniels for 46 years. He has two children, four grandsons, and two granddaughters. He attended South Arkansas University and University of Arkansas at Little Rock, and received an honorary doctorate in Humane Letters from Shorter College in North Little Rock.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

The secretary of state's office was established in the Constitution of 1836 as a continuation of the office of territorial secretary. The Constitution of 1868 made the office elective, a change reaffirmed in the Constitution of 1874. Traditionally, the office concerned itself with records keeping, particularly maintaining a register of the official acts and proclamations of the governor. Today, the secretary of state serves as the state's chief elections officer, caretaker of the Capitol and its grounds, the custodian and conservator of various public records, the registrar of copyrights, agencies, notary commissions and corporations doing business in Arkansas, as well as collector of the state's franchise tax. In addition, the secretary of state or his or her representative serves on several bodies, including the state Board of Apportionment.

ATTORNEY GENERAL
Dustin McDaniel

On January 9, 2007, Dustin McDaniel was sworn in as the 55th attorney general for the State of Arkansas, the youngest attorney general in the nation. Prior to becoming the attorney general, Dustin McDaniel was a Democratic member of the Arkansas House of Representatives, representing District 75.

McDaniel was born in Fayetteville (Washington County) in 1972. He attended the University of Arkansas and before enrolling in the university's law school served as a uniformed officer for the Jonesboro Police Department. After graduating from law school, McDaniel joined the firm of McDaniel and Wells in Jonesboro and rose to partnership.

As attorney general, McDaniel has focused on consumer protection, successfully suing pharmaceutical companies over marketing practices and shutting down almost all payday lending in the state. Under his leadership, the attorney general's office has successfully proposed various legislation covering truckers' logbooks, sexual predation and "adult" businesses.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

The position of attorney general was first created by the Act of February 3, 1843. This statute designated the state's attorney general for its fifth judicial district "the attorney general of the State of Arkansas," briefly set out the office's duties and set its salary at $600 per year. In the Constitution of 1868 the post was made elective and it was reaffirmed as such in the 1874 revision. Act 131 of the 1911 Legislature spelled out fundamental duties of the office: the attorney general would represent the state in legal actions argued in federal courts including the United States Supreme Court, where the interest of the State was involved. In addition, the attorney general would supply opinions to prosecuting attorneys concerning interpretations of constitutional, civil and criminal law. Over the years, the duties and undertakings of the office have expanded to include participation on or advice to boards and commissions, protection of youth and senior citizens, negotiation of compromises on taxes owed the state and other matters.

TREASURER OF STATE
Martha Shoffner

Martha Ann Shoffner was elected Arkansas treasurer of state in 2006.

Shoffner grew up in Jackson County, Arkansas. She graduated from Newport High School, attended Memphis State University (now the University of Memphis) and Arkansas State University. In 2007, Shoffner graduated from the National Institute for Public Finance at the Kellogg School of Management, Northwestern University.

Shoffner began her career in the private sector by joining a major Little Rock advertising firm and subsequently becoming a licensed real estate agent in Newport. Her involvement in public service began as assistant to the auditor of state. Shoffner was elected to three terms in the state House of Representatives, beginning in 1997; she served as chairman of the State Agencies and Governmental Affairs Committee, and also was a member of the Joint Budget Committee and the Joint Committee on Retirement and Social Security.

She is a member of the Arkansas Women's Forum, Business & Professional Women's Club, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Jackson County Humane Society, Newport Chamber of Commerce, and participates in a local women's golf organization. In 1996, Shoffner was named Jackson County's woman of the year.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

Created by the 1836 Constitution, the treasurer of state's fundamental duty, as expressed in the code, is to "receive and keep all the moneys of the state not expressly required...to be kept by some other person; to disburse the public moneys...; to keep... an account of [receipts and disbursements];" and to render accounts to the auditor, governor and Legislature on a regular basis. Thus, the treasurer's office:

1. Receives and keeps all state money collected by the administering agency.
2. Keeps an account of all money received and disbursed for more than 400 fund accounts, representing the fund equities of more than 200 state agencies.
3. Disburses funds by redeeming warrants drawn on the State Treasury in accordance with state law.
4. Reports to the governor every two years through the Biennial Report the condition of the Treasury and its operations.

The treasurer also serves as custodian and safekeeping agent for twelve state systems with an average balance of more than $600 million, manages and invests cash funds, distributes county and municipal aid, local sales and use taxes, real estate transfer taxes, severance, boating safety, and dog racing taxes. The treasurer also services rural medical revolving loans and grants, and processes debt service, investing, and agent fees for general obligation bonds and college savings bonds.

AUDITOR OF STATE
Jim Wood

Born in Newport, Arkansas, Jim Wood attended Tupelo Elementary, Newport Junior High, Augusta High School and Arkansas State Teacher's College in Conway. Through most of his adult life he has balanced farming with public service in various capacities.

Wood was named one of the top three young farmers and ranchers in Arkansas by the Farm Bureau in 1974 and 1976. In 1978 he ran for and won a seat in the state Senate; his initial performance won him recognition as outstanding freshman legislator by the State Employees Association in 1979. He served in the Senate until 1988, returned to the private sector, then stood for the state House of Representatives in 1997. In 2002, he sought and won the constitutional post of auditor of state. He is now retired from farming, but still owns farm land in Woodruff County.

In addition to his service in Little Rock, Wood's public service career has included work on the Woodruff County Quorum Court and the Agricultural Advisory Board of the Southern Legislative Conference. He received the Winthrop Rockefeller award for contribution to the arts in 1979, the Distinguished Service Award from the Disabled American Veterans in 1983, the Exceptional Service Award from the Disabled American Veterans in 1987, and the National Commander's Award from Veterans of Foreign Wars in 1987.

Jim Wood and his wife, the former Ann Duncan, have been married for 37 years and have two married sons and two granddaughters.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

The auditor's office was created in the Constitution of 1836, continuing a territorial office extant since 1819. The auditor acts as the general accountant for the State, keeping track of all fund and appropriation balances of all state agencies, and writing the warrants (checks) in payment of the liabilities of the state.

The auditor is also the disbursing officer for certain federal funds and for approximately 1,000 individuals including Supreme and Appellate Court justices, Circuit and Chancery Court judges, prosecuting and special prosecuting attorneys, court reporters, trial court administrative assistants, the House of Representatives, the Senate, county juvenile probate and intake officers. The auditor also disburses Continuing Education funds for County and Circuit Clerks, Treasurers and Collectors.

The Auditor is a member of the State Board of Finance and, by statute, is the administrator of the Unclaimed Property Act. He serves on several boards and commissions, including the Arkansas Public Employees Retirement System and the Arkansas Teachers Retirement System. The auditor serves on the Boards of Continuing Education for County and Circuit Clerks, County Treasurers and County Collectors, and administers their continuing education program.

LAND COMMISSIONER
Mark Wilcox

Prior to entering public service, Mark Wilcox worked his family's farm and ranch north of Conway. From 1990 to 2002, Wilcox served as a county official in Faulkner County. He was elected justice of the peace in 1990, and when elected as tax collector in 1992, he was the first person to serve in that position once it became a separate office. Wilcox was sworn in as land commissioner in January 2003. At that time, land office records showed that more than 51,000 parcels remained delinquent statewide. Under his leadership, and as of July 2005, only 7,000 parcels remained outstanding after public auction.

A graduate of the Faulkner County Leadership Institute, Wilcox is a former member of the board of directors of the Faulkner County United Way and the Conway Area Chamber of Commerce. He serves on the board of the Faulkner County Farm Bureau and is past president of that county's Cattlemen's Association. He is active in the leadership of the Western States Land Commissioners Association.

He and his wife, Lisa, have one son, Dustin. Wilcox continues to raise cattle on his family's farm.

ABOUT THE OFFICE

This office was created by the Legislature in 1868 as the commissioner of immigration and state lands; the title was to be awarded as an additional responsibility for the commissioner of public works and internal improvements until such a time as the Legislature provided for appointment of a separate officer. The post became elective in 1874 and its present title was adopted in 1929. The commissioner's office today fulfills the functions of the defunct state land office. Its primary tasks are the sale and redemption of tax-delinquent lands throughout the state, as well as the disposal by sale of suitable state properties, liaison with county clerks, safeguarding of deeds to all state properties and collecting delinquent taxes on real property.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS

The post of lieutenant governor was authorized under the Constitution of 1864. It was vacant between the resignation of James M. Johnson in January 1871 and the inauguration of Volney V. Smith in early 1872. The office was eliminated altogether in the Constitution of 1874, reauthorized by Amendment 6 in 1914 and, after clarification of questions related to ratification requirements, finally re-filled in 1927.

CHAPTER FOUR: LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

ARKANSAS GENERAL ASSEMBLY	82
ARKANSAS SENATE	84
ARKANSAS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES	92
HISTORICAL ROSTER	107

ARKANSAS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The 135 men and women who serve in the Arkansas House of Representatives and Senate come from every area of the state and represent many vocations, professions and backgrounds, a diversity that in many ways mirrors the people of Arkansas.

Arkansas's system of government has much in common with governments developed early in our nation's history and adopted on national, state and local levels. It maintains a division of authority among three branches — legislative, executive and judicial — which balance the government's power to prevent its abuse.

The General Assembly is the legislative branch of state government and has the authority to write, enact state laws. The executive branch, with the Governor as chief executive, administers these laws. The judicial branch, headed by the state Supreme Court, administers justice and interprets the law in accordance with the Constitution.

There are 35 members of the state Senate and 100 members of the House. The Lieutenant Governor serves as President of the Senate. In his absence, the Senate President Pro Tempore serves in his place. The presiding officer of the House, the Speaker, is elected by House members at the beginning of each regular session.

The Arkansas Constitution calls for the General Assembly to meet in regular session for no more than 75 days each odd-numbered year and in "fiscal" or budget session for 30 days in even-numbered years. Sessions may be extended by a three-fourths vote of the membership of both houses. Regular sessions convene on the second Monday in January, while fiscal sessions commence on the second Monday in February.

It is not unusual during a session for the General Assembly to address as many as 2,000 bills and resolutions, all introduced by members of the House or Senate. Much of the study and discussion of legislation takes place in committee during the interim, the period between legislative sessions.

The Arkansas General Assembly has, over its decades of operation, developed a complex structure of committees and subcommittees which deal with matters of state great and small during both session and interim. Legislative meetings are open to all, continuing Arkansas's tradition of inviting constituent scrutiny of public affairs. During session, the General Assembly assumes responsibility for offering guided tours of the Capitol to the many visitors who desire to see their government at work.

HOW A BILL BECOMES A LAW

A bill is, at its heart, simply an idea that someone would like to see become law. Bills address matters great and small, ranging from setting penalties for committing particular crimes to designating official state symbols. Such an idea can originate with anyone, but only a member of the state's General Assembly, a senator or a representative, may take that idea, guide it along the way from thought to enacted law.

Drafting a bill simply means putting the idea into legal language and making sure it meets the requirements of the Joint Rules of the House and Senate. The actual drafting is done by the Bureau of Legislative Research.

Introduction of a bill can be made by any member of the House or Senate, and more than one legislator can sponsor a bill. A bill is given to the chief clerk of the House or the secretary of the Senate and assigned a number. The sponsor(s) of a bill signs the original copy.

First and second readings are the next steps. It is customary for a bill to be read the first and second time on the same day, but only the number and title are read unless the members vote otherwise. After reading, a bill is assigned to committee.

There are ten standing committees in the House and nine similar standing committees in the Senate. Each House committee has twenty members; Senate committees have seven or eight members each. There are five joint committees made up of members from both the House and Senate.

During legislative sessions, committees usually meet in the morning to examine bills. Committees generally are where public comments are gathered on proposed legislation. During a committee hearing, the senator or representative sponsoring a bill will explain the measure and often will bring in expert testimony as support. Those who oppose a bill will also present their case, and frequently the committee will hold public hearings.

Committee action is crucial to the legislative process. A committee's responsibility is to examine a bill carefully and make one of three recommendations "Do pass," "Do pass as amended," or "Do not pass."

The committee report on a bill is read to the entire membership of the House or Senate. If a member of the General Assembly wants to change the wording of a bill, add something or take something out of a bill, the senator or representative will amend the bill. While any legislator can propose an amendment, it takes a majority of the entire membership of one house to adopt an amendment. Once adopted, the amended bill must be considered by a committee.

When the committee has completed its deliberations, the bill is put in final form with or without amendments and placed on the calendar. The bill is now ready to be read a third time, debated, voted on by the entire membership of the House or Senate. It is up to the bill's sponsor to bring it up for final consideration.

Most bills can be passed by a majority vote (51 in the House; 18 in the Senate), but most bills that appropriate money and some that increase taxes require a three-fourths vote of the membership of each body.

ARKANSAS SENATE

The 35 members of the Senate are elected from 35 districts. The districts vary in size, but the population is approximately the same—about 76,382 based on figures from the 2000 U.S. Census. Boundaries of all legislative districts are redrawn after the U.S. Census is taken every 10 years to ensure equal representation in the Legislature for every resident of Arkansas.

A person must be at least 25 years old, a U.S. citizen, a resident of Arkansas for two years and a resident of his or her senatorial district for one year before being eligible to serve in the Senate. Senators serve staggered four-year terms, with one half of the Senate membership being elected every two years. As of 1998, senators are limited to two four-year terms.

The lieutenant governor is the president of the Senate and presides during the sessions. He or she does not participate in debate and votes only to break a tie. The Senate president pro tempore serves in the absence of the lieutenant governor and is elected from the Senate membership. The president pro tempore follows the lieutenant governor in the line of succession to the office of the governor.

Much of the Senate's work is carried out by nine standing committees whose members review and recommend action on legislation. The nine standing committees are Agriculture, Forestry, Economic Development; City, County, and Local Affairs; Education; Insurance and Commerce; Judiciary; Public Health, Welfare and Labor; Revenue and Taxation; State Agencies and Governmental Affairs; and Transportation, Technology and Legislative Affairs.

In addition to the standing committees, senators also serve on joint committees and on Senate select committees. Joint committees include Joint Budget, Joint Retirement and Social Security Programs, Joint Energy, Joint Performance Review, and Interim Child and Youth. Senate select committees include the Efficiency Committee and the Committee on Rules, Resolutions, Memorials.

ARKANSAS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The House of Representatives consists of 100 members elected from 100 districts which, like the Senate districts, are apportioned on a one-person, one-vote basis. Each House district has an average population of 26,734, based on the 2000 U.S. Census.

When the 86th Arkansas General Assembly convened in 2007, the House was made up of 79 men and 21 women; 75 were Democrats and 25 were Republicans. A House member must be at least 21 years old, a resident of Arkansas for two years and a resident of his or her district for one year. Members of the House serve two-year terms. As of 1998, they are limited to three terms.

The Speaker of the House presides over the body and is elected by the membership every two years. It is customary for the speaker to designate a speaker pro tempore who presides in the absence of the speaker. The speaker also may designate representatives from each of the House's four caucus districts to serve as assistant speaker pro tempore.

The House employs an electronic voting system. To vote, a member pushes buttons on his or her desk. The green button means "yes," the red button "no" and the yellow button "present." The votes are displayed on two large electronic boards at the front of the House chamber and are counted at the speaker's desk. An official record of the tabulations is placed into the journals.

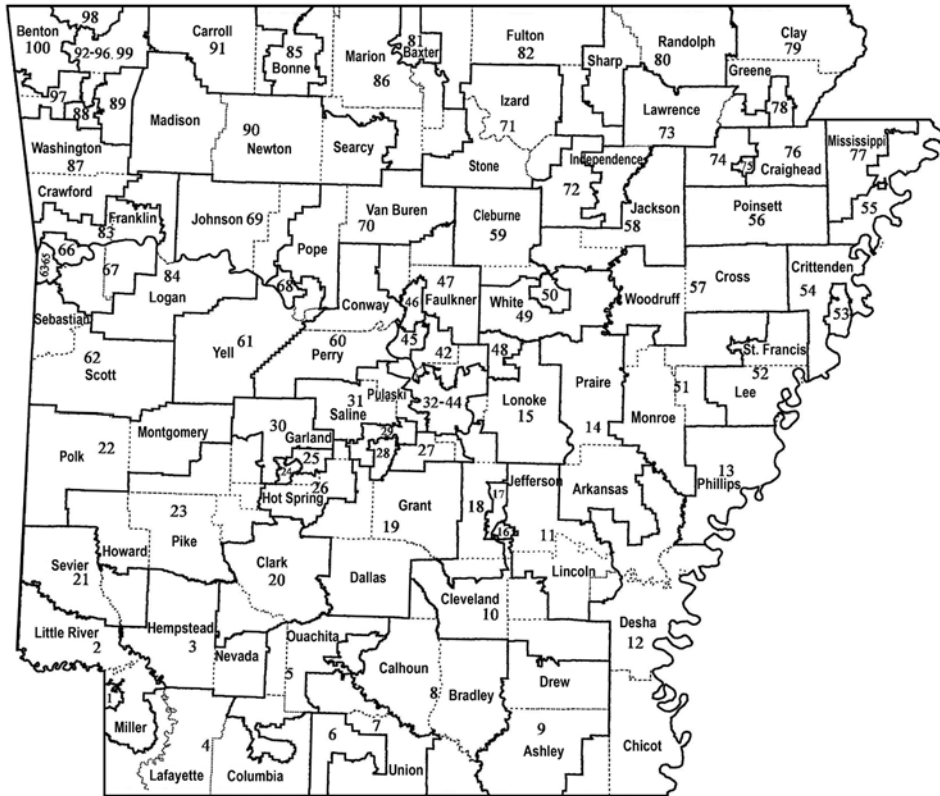

Because the House chamber is large and there are 100 members, each member has a microphone. When members wish to speak, they stand or raise their hands in an effort to be recognized by the speaker. Once recognized, a member speaks into the microphone, which is turned on at the large console in the front of the chamber.

The House has 10 standing committees: Education; Judiciary; Public Health, Welfare and Labor; Public Transportation; Revenue and Taxation; Aging, Children and Youth; Legislative and Military Affairs; Insurance and Commerce; and State Agencies and Governmental Affairs. Each representative serves on two Standing Committees, each committee has 20 members. Standing Committee chairmen and vice-chairmen are selected from respective committee rosters by the Speaker.

In addition to the Standing Committees, representatives serve on Select Committees. The Joint Budget, Joint Retirement and Social Security Programs, Joint Energy, Joint Performance Review, and Joint Committee on Advanced Communications and Information Technology Committees operate jointly with the Senate. Two other Select Committees—House Rules, House Management—operate exclusively within the House.

ARKANSAS COURT STRUCTURE

HISTORICAL ROSTERS

Before 1803, legal authority over the area that became the State of Arkansas was exercised by, successively, the French Superior Council, the Spanish Secular Cabildo, or the colonial governor in New Orleans. At Arkansas Post, the judges included a feudal seigneur, subordinates of Jacques Levens (the director of John Law's Arkansas concession) and, most commonly, post commandants who exercised both civil and criminal jurisdiction.

With the Louisiana Purchase of 1803, Arkansas, as a part of the District of Louisiana, was attached to the Territory of Indiana for judicial purposes. In 1804, Indiana territorial Governor William Henry Harrison and three territorial judges held court in the district capital of St. Louis and enacted laws for the region. The following year, the name of the district was changed to the Territory of Louisiana; President Thomas Jefferson made three judicial appointments to the Superior Court.

An 1806 act of the Territorial Legislature created the District of Arkansas. Following the admission of the State of Louisiana in 1812, Arkansas remained a district of the newly named Territory of Missouri, and the Superior Court retained its jurisdiction. On March 2, 1819, President James Monroe approved a congressional act that established a separate Territory of Arkansas and, two days later, appointed three judges to the Arkansas Superior Court. The first sessions were held at Arkansas Post in November 1819 and January 1820. Congress added a fourth judge to the panel in 1828.

Judges of the Superior Court of the State of Arkansas

On June 15, 1836, President Andrew Jackson signed a bill to admit the State of Arkansas to the Union, effective the Fourth of July. Article VI, Section 1, of the Arkansas Constitution of 1836 vested the judicial power of the state “in one Supreme Court, in Circuit Courts, in County Courts and in Justices of the Peace.” Section 2 declared that the Supreme Court would consist of three judges, including a chief justice who would “have appellate jurisdiction only.”

Although the Reconstruction Constitution of 1868 added two justices, the Constitution of 1874 negated the expansion but stipulated that when the population of the state should “amount to one million, the General Assembly may, if deemed necessary, increase the number of judges of the Supreme Court to five”(Ark. Const. art. 7, §§ 3). That milestone was reached by the end of the next decade, and in Act 19 of 1889 the legislature authorized a total of five justices. Constitutional sanction of the enlargement came in 1924 with voter approval of Amendment 9, which also allowed for the future legislative creation of two additional judgeships. Act 205 of 1925 brought the number of justices to seven, the current complement of the court.

Judges of the Circuit Courts

Article VI, Section 1, of the Arkansas Constitution of 1836 established the existence of circuit courts throughout the state, continuing a system established in 1823 under territorial law. Circuit courts once differentiated between courts of law and courts of equity (Chancery courts); Arkansas Constitutional Amendment 80, which became effective in July 2001, eliminated this distinction but ordained that as of January 1, 2002, circuit courts should consist of five subject matter divisions: criminal, civil, probate, domestic relations, and juvenile. An administrative order promulgated by the Supreme Court in 2006 required the state's circuits to formulate administrative plans creating internal jurisdictional divisions to better address the courts' growing and varied caseloads.

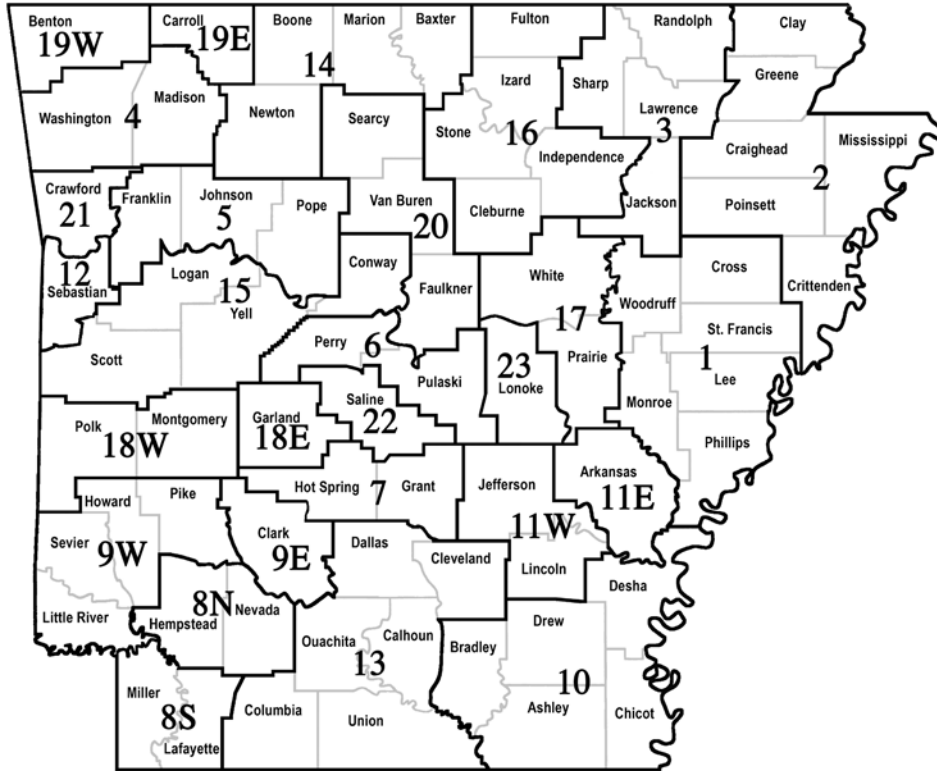

Today, circuit courts are considered general jurisdiction trial courts; judges are elected for terms of six years on a non-partisan basis. Arkansas is divided into twenty-three judicial circuits; five of these are subdivided into two sections. Before 1979, chancery and circuit court districts were not identical but in that year they were realigned so as to coincide. Initially, Arkansas territory was divided into four circuits, which grew to seven in 1840, eight in 1846, shrank to six in 1848, then resumed expansion in 1860. In the following compilation, the circuits' designations are continued from their inception to the present day, irrespective of changes made in the number of circuits or in the counties which make up each one. Dates, unless otherwise indicated, mark beginning of service; where and when available, dates for end of term are also supplied.

During the last three decades of the Twentieth century, the larger circuits, particularly, were subdivided and judges assigned areas of specialty, the process culminating in a wholesale reorganization after the 2001 merger of the formerly separate courts of law and chancery. During this fluid period, circuit and chancery judges were inconsistently recorded as to their affiliation on various rosters; the following compilation is an attempt to reconcile existing inconsistencies.

For justices elected before 2001, indication is made of whether their affiliation was Circuit or chancery; for those whose names were recorded as holding one, two or three portfolios, we have reserved the category of "combined"; judges currently serving in the various circuits are also recorded under this rubric. Information concerning current assignments of duties is found in the circuits' administrative plans, on file with the Administrative Office of the Courts.

CHAPTER SIX: ARKANSAS COUNTIES

ABOUT ARKANSAS COUNTIES

Arkansas is made up of seventy-five counties, each of which enjoys a high degree of autonomy in the exercise of its internal affairs. The counties, like those throughout the rest of the nation, were originally created as administrative districts for the convenience of the state government; through them, state laws could be enforced and taxes collected.

Over time, however, the counties grew in terms of what they provided their populations and what they collected from them, becoming polities in their own right. The 1874 Arkansas Constitution limited the powers of state and municipal governments; this reflected the essentially rural nature of Arkansas's population at that time. For most Arkansans, local government meant the county government. Through the process of amendment both state and city governments have expanded their influence over the intervening decades but county governments still provide vital services and amenities to much of the state's population. Amendment 55, adopted in 1974, conferred "home rule" to the counties, giving them legislative authority when not in conflict with that of other jurisdictions; a 1981 national study ranked Arkansas very high in terms of powers wielded by its county governments.

Arkansas's first four counties (Arkansas, Lawrence, Hempstead and Pulaski) were sparsely populated political units inherited from its time as a part of Missouri. After the creation of the territory in 1819, however, the huge counties were divided and subdivided, the last (Cleburne) created in 1883. Several counties have been renamed and one—Lovely—was extinguished in 1828 after it was determined that most of its land was, in fact, Cherokee tribal land, part of the Indian Territory (present-day Oklahoma).

County governments are headed by officers stipulated in Article 7 of the state Constitution, with powers set out in Title 14 of the Arkansas Code. The following rosters of county officials reflect variant practice among counties in terms of combining offices. In Arkansas, Bradley, Calhoun, Clark, Clay, Drew, Grant, Hempstead, Howard, Lee, Little River, Monroe, Montgomery, Nevada, Ouachita, Perry, Phillips, Pike, Poinsett, Polk, Prairie, Scott, Searcy, Sevier, St. Francis, Woodruff and Yell counties, the posts of sheriff and tax collector are combined. In Johnson, Lafayette, Pulaski and Sebastian, the treasurer is also the collector while in the others the offices are separate. Many counties' rosters note that offices were temporarily abolished in 1873; this likely reflects that period's unsettled political climate and widespread election irregularities. Most counties elected supervisors in the early 1920s, a post eliminated after 1926.

These rosters are based on information returned from the counties; gaps may reflect positions being left vacant for a variety of reasons, or are due to destroyed records (at least thirty-six Arkansas counties have suffered total or partial losses of their records due to courthouse fires and floods). Spelling variations reflect names as reported in earlier county rosters. When practicable, variant renderings of an official's name have been reduced to a single form. Footnotes have, when possible, been revised for greater clarity, and vacancies in office rosters have been investigated in order to correctly report as many officeholders as possible.

ARKANSAS COUNTY

Founded: Dec. 13, 1813
County Seats: DeWitt,
Stuttgart
Area: 1,034 sq. mi.
Population: 20,749

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 5, 28
State Representative: 12, 14
Court of Appeals: 7

BOONE COUNTY

Founded: 1869
County Seat: Harrison
Area: 602 sq. mi.
Population: 33,948

Districts

Congressional: 3
State Senatorial: 1, 2
State Representative: 85,
86, 91
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 14

BOONE County's name is usually associated with frontiersman Daniel Boone, but some sources indicate that it refers to the beautiful landscape being a "boon" or gift to early settlers. Arkansas's 63rd county was created from portions of Carroll and Madison counties.

Table Rock Lake, on the Missouri/Arkansas border.

BRADLEY COUNTY

Founded: 1840
County Seat: Warren
Area: 654 sq. mi.
Population: 12,600

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 24
State Representative: 8
Court of Appeals: 5
Circuit Court: 10

Arkansas's 43rd county was named for Captain Hugh Bradley, a hero of the War of 1812. It was created out of Union County and later contributed land to Dallas, Drew, Lincoln and Cleveland counties. The county is a major forest products source but is perhaps better known instate as the traditional home of vine-ripened pink tomatoes.

CARROLL COUNTY

Founded: 1833
County Seats: Berryville,
Eureka Springs
Area: 639 sq. mi.
Population: 25,357

Districts

Congressional: 3
State Senatorial: 2
State Representative: 91

CHICOT COUNTY

Founded: 1823
County Seat: Lake Village
Area: 691 sq. mi.
Population: 14,117

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 24
State Representative: 12
Court of Appeals: 7
Circuit Court: 10

CHICOT County was created from Arkansas County in 1823. It later contributed land to Desha and Ashley counties. The name derives from Point Chicot on the Mississippi River; the French noun chicot, or stump, is a probable reference to numerous cypress knees or stumps visible along the river.

CLEBURNE COUNTY

Founded: 1883
County Seat: Heber Springs
Area: 592 sq. mi.
Population: 24,046

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 12, 18
State Representative: 59
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 16

CLEBURNE County was created from lands severed from Independence, Van Buren and White counties. It takes its name from former Helena pharmacist and Confederate General Patrick Cleburne, a hero of the Southern cause. Cleburne was the 75th and final county to be organized; it is known for poultry and cattle raising, as well as dramatic Ozark scenery.

Higden Bridge, the last suspension bridge built in Arkansas, 1949.

CLEVELAND COUNTY

Founded: 1873
County Seat: Rison
Area: 599 sq. mi.
Population: 8,571

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 23
State Representative: 10, 18
Court of Appeals: 5

COLUMBIA COUNTY

Founded: 1852
County Seat: Magnolia
Area: 767 sq. mi.
Population: 25,603

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 21, 26
State Representative: 4, 5
Court of Appeals: 5
Circuit Court: 13

COLUMBIA County was organized from portions of Hempstead, Lafayette, Ouachita and Union counties; it later ceded land to Nevada County. Named after Columbia, the synonym for the United States often depicted as a classical goddess, the county topography is characterized by rolling hills covered with timber and peppered by farms.

CONWAY COUNTY

Founded: 1825
County Seat: Morrilton
Area: 567 sq. mi.
Population: 20,336

Districts

Congressional: 2
State Senatorial: 18
State Representative: 47, 60
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 15

CONWAY County was created from part of Pulaski County in territorial days; it later contributed to Van Buren, Perry and Faulkner counties. It was named in honor of Henry W. Conway, territorial delegate to Congress. Two years after the county's creation, Conway would die of wounds from a duel fought with former Territorial Secretary Robert Crittenden.

CRAWFORD COUNTY

Founded: 1820
County Seat: Van Buren
Area: 604 sq. mi.
Population: 53,247

Districts

Congressional: 3
State Senatorial: 3
State Representative: 66,
83, 87
Court of Appeals: 3
Circuit Court: 21

CRAWFORD County was created from part of Pulaski County, with tracts from Cherokee tribal lands later added. Sometimes dubbed “the empire county” because of its great original size, Crawford contained parts of present-day Scott, Sebastian, Franklin, Washington and Pope counties. It was named after William H. Crawford, then the secretary of the treasury.

CRITTENDEN COUNTY

Founded: 1825
County Seat: Marion
Area: 637 sq. mi.
Population: 50,886

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 16, 17
State Representative: 53, 54
Court of Appeals: 1
Circuit Court: 2

CRITTENDEN county was created from lands severed from Phillips County, and later contributed to Mississippi, Lee and Cross counties. It was created almost simultaneously with Conway County; its name honors former Territorial Secretary Robert Crittenden who, ironically, would fatally wound Conway County's namesake in an 1827 duel.

Plantation single-pen log cabins in Crittenden County.

DALLAS COUNTY

Founded: 1845
County Seat: Fordyce
Area: 668 sq. mi.
Population: 9,210

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 26
State Representative: 8, 19
Court of Appeals: 5
Circuit Court: 13

DALLAS county was created from portions of Bradley and Clark counties, and Dallas County later lost surface area to Calhoun and Cleveland counties.

It takes its name from George Dallas, elected vice president in 1844. The county's rolling hills are heavily forested; timber, plywood and other forest products have long been its economic mainstays.

Bell in Dallas County.

DESHA COUNTY

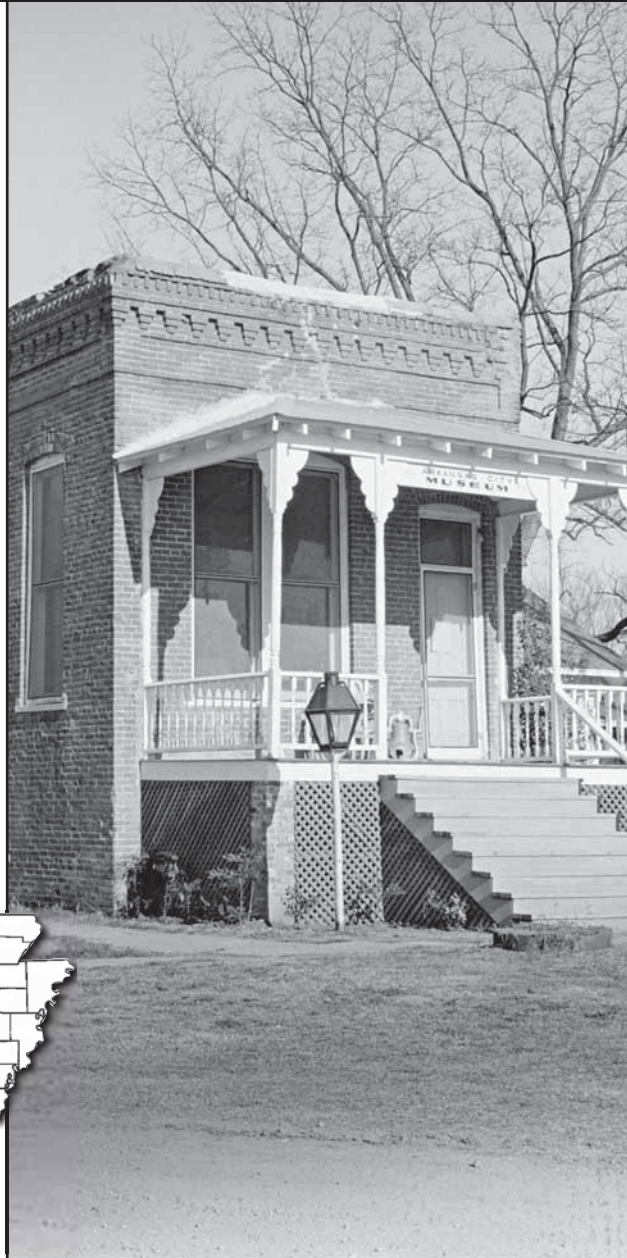

Founded: 1838
County Seat: Arkansas City
Area: 820 sq. mi.
Population: 15,341

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 23, 24
State Representative: 11, 12
Court of Appeals: 7
Circuit Court: 10

DESHA County was named for War of 1812 veteran and early local landowner Captain Benjamin Desha. This county's rich Delta bottomlands adjoin the junction of the Mississippi, Arkansas and White Rivers. It was initially created from Arkansas County; parts of Lincoln and Chicot counties were later added and land was severed to help create Drew County.

FRANKLIN COUNTY

Founded: 1837
County Seats: Ozark,
Charleston
Area: 620 sq. mi.
Population: 17,771

Districts

Congressional: 3
State Senatorial: 3
State Representative: 67,
83, 84
Court of Appeals: 3
Circuit Court: 5

FRANKLIN County was formed from Crawford County and later ceded part of its territory to form Logan County. It took its name from early American journalist, philosopher and statesman Benjamin Franklin. The county straddles the Arkansas River; its twin seats testify to the difficulty of crossing the river in earlier times.

White Rock Mountain, Ozark National Forest.

HOT SPRING COUNTY

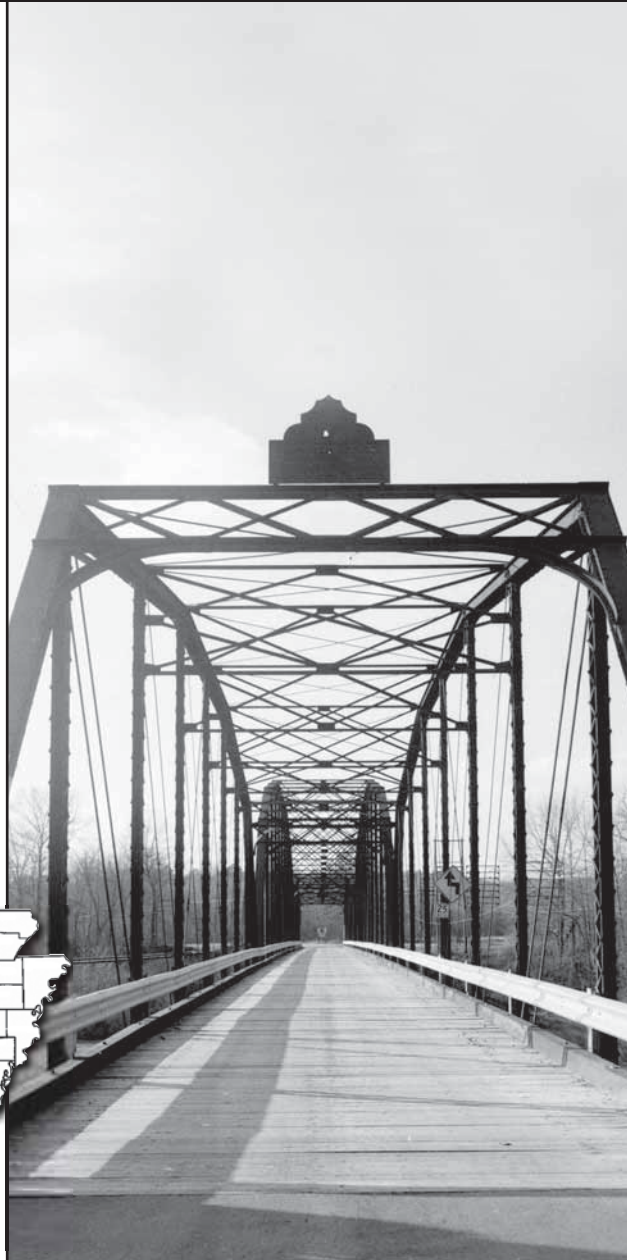

Founded: 1829
County Seat: Malvern
Area: 622 sq. mi.
Population: 30,353

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 27
State Representative: 19,
23, 26
Court of Appeals: 4
Circuit Court: 7

HOT SPRING County was created out of land severed from Clark County; it later provided land for Garland, Grant and Montgomery counties. Its name derives from the thermal features which are now located in Garland County. The county is known for its geological diversity: some sixty-five minerals are found within its boundaries.

INDEPENDENCE COUNTY

Founded: 1820
County Seat: Batesville
Area: 1,042 sq. mi.
Population: 34,233

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 10, 12
State Representative: 71,
72, 73
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 16

INDEPENDENCE County was created in early territorial days from part of Lawrence County; Independence later contributed land to Izard, Jackson, Van Buren, Sharp, Stone and Cleburne counties. Its name honors the Declaration of Independence; its topography combines the rolling Ozark foothills with delta farmlands.

Arkansas College in Batesville, 1960.

LAWRENCE COUNTY

Founded: 1815
County Seat: Walnut Ridge
Area: 592 sq. mi.
Population: 17,774

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 11
State Representative: 73
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 3

LAWRENCE County was created in 1815 by the Missouri Legislature, which had jurisdiction over the region until Arkansas became a territory in 1819. Lawrence subsequently ceded land to form Independence, Greene, Randolph and Sharp counties. It is named for Captain James Lawrence, a brave but unlucky naval hero of the War of 1812.

Old Lawrence County Courthouse in Powhatan.

LONOKE COUNTY

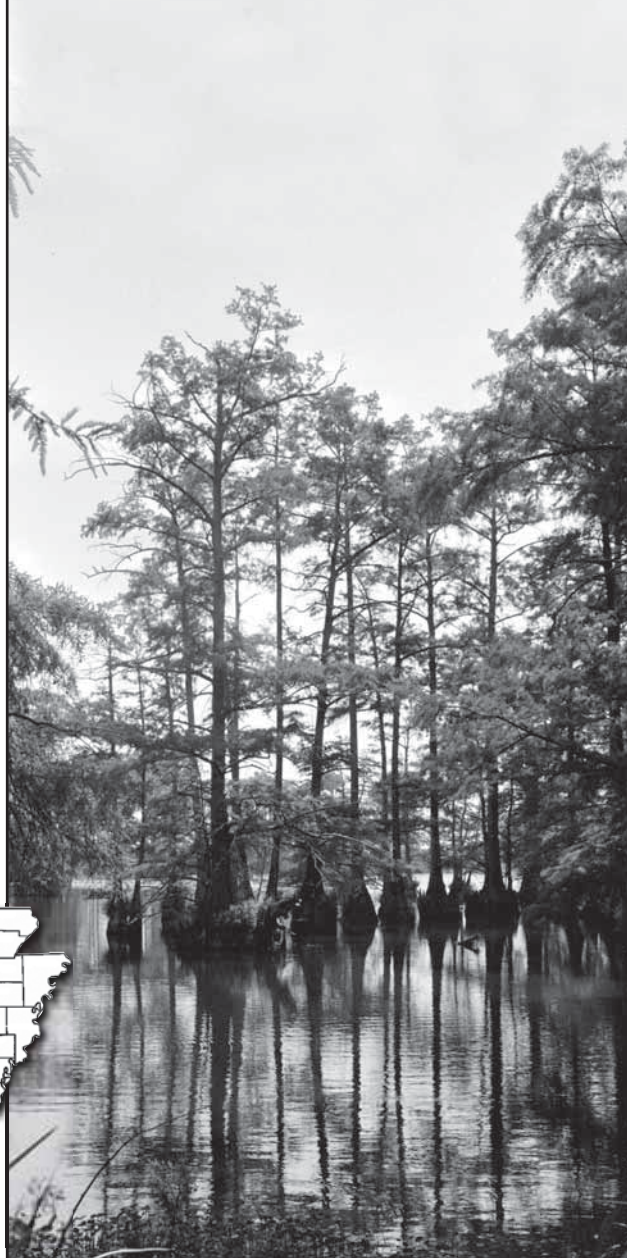

Founded: 1873
County Seat: Lonoke
Area: 802 sq. mi.
Population: 52,828

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 28
State Representative: 15, 48
Court of Appeals: 1
Circuit Court: 23

LONOKE County's seat bears the same name as the county itself, coined by a railroad surveyor who used a massive red oak tree as a landmark. Lonoke was created from Prairie and Pulaski counties. It is mainly agricultural but also is home to significant Native American archeological sites.

Cypress trees at Hill's Lake, located along United States Highway 70 in Lonoke County.

MARION COUNTY

Founded: 1836
County Seat: Yellville
Area: 640 sq. mi.
Population: 16,140

Districts

Congressional: 3
State Senatorial: 1
State Representative: 86
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 14

MARION County, first named Searcy County, was renamed in 1836 to honor General Francis Marion, the “Swamp Fox” of Revolutionary War fame. It was created of land ceded by Izaard County. The county is mountainous and about one-third of its area is covered by water, annually attracting legions of boaters and anglers.

Shawnee Cave, about 8 miles south of Yellville.

MONROE COUNTY

Founded: 1829
County Seat: Clarendon
Area: 621 sq. mi.
Population: 10,254

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 17
State Representative: 51
Court of Appeals: 1
Circuit Court: 1

MONROE County was named for the popular fifth U.S. president, James Monroe. This county combined land severed from Arkansas and Phillips counties and in 1873 provided land for the newly created Lee County. The land is level, well-watered and fertile; the county is also a center of ornithological interest.

NEVADA COUNTY

Founded: 1871
County Seat: Prescott
Area: 621 sq. mi.
Population: 9,955

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 26
State Representative: 3, 5, 20
Court of Appeals: 5
Circuit Court: 8N

NEVADA County was formed from parts of Columbia, Hempstead and Ouachita counties. Its name comes from the similarity of its shape to the state of Nevada; the pronunciation, however, is different: in Arkansas, the “a” is pronounced as a long vowel. Nevada County’s landscape is rolling hills, largely forested.

NEWTON COUNTY

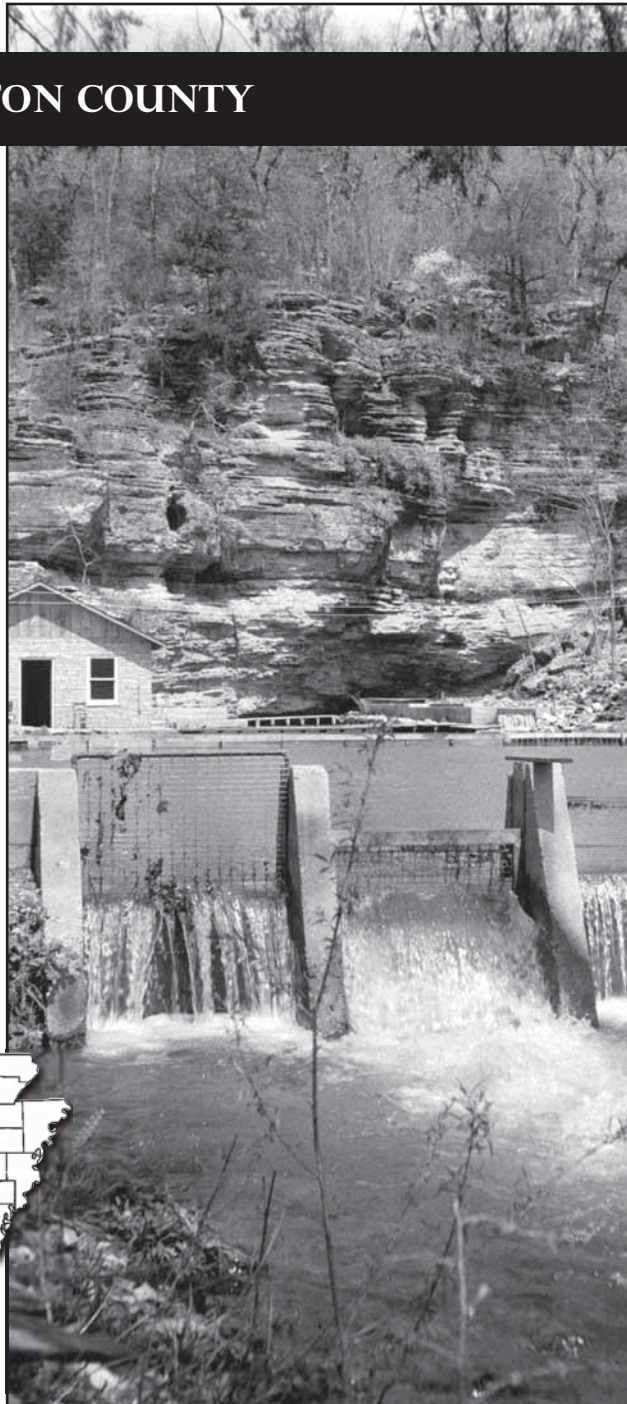

Founded: 1842
County Seat: Jasper
Area: 601 sq. mi.
Population: 8,608

Districts

Congressional: 3
State Senatorial: 2
State Representative: 90
Court of Appeals: 2

OUACHITA COUNTY

Founded: 1842
County Seat: Camden
Area: 740 sq. mi.
Population: 28,790

Districts

Congressional: 4
State Senatorial: 25, 26
State Representative: 5, 7
Court of Appeals: 5

PRAIRIE COUNTY

Founded: 1846
County Seats: Des Arc,
DeValls Bluff
Area: 676 sq. mi.
Population: 9,539

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 28
State Representative: 14
Court of Appeals: 1
Circuit Court: 17

PRAIRIE County was created from part of Pulaski County and later was divided to create Lonoke County. As the name suggests, the county's landscape is dominated by great open spaces. It lies on an extent of level land between the lower White and Arkansas rivers, known as early as 1819 as the Grand Prairie.

SALINE COUNTY

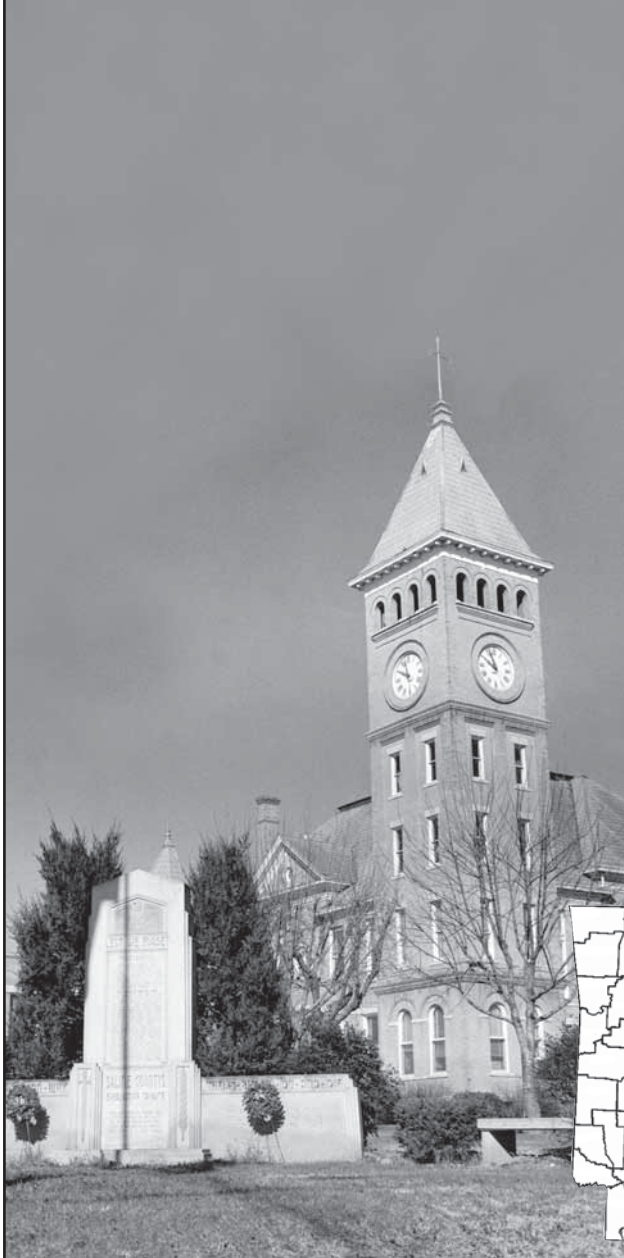

Founded: 1835
County Seat: Benton
Area: 730 sq. mi.
Population: 83,529

Districts

Congressional: 2
State Senatorial: 18, 22,
23, 27
State Representative: 27, 28,
29, 31
Court of Appeals: 6
Circuit Court: 22

SALINE County's name refers to the salt deposits which supplied Arkansas and surrounding states. Formed from parts of Pulaski and Hempstead counties, Saline contributed to both Grant and Garland counties. During the 20th century, Saline County was known less for salt than for its mammoth bauxite mines.

SEARCY COUNTY

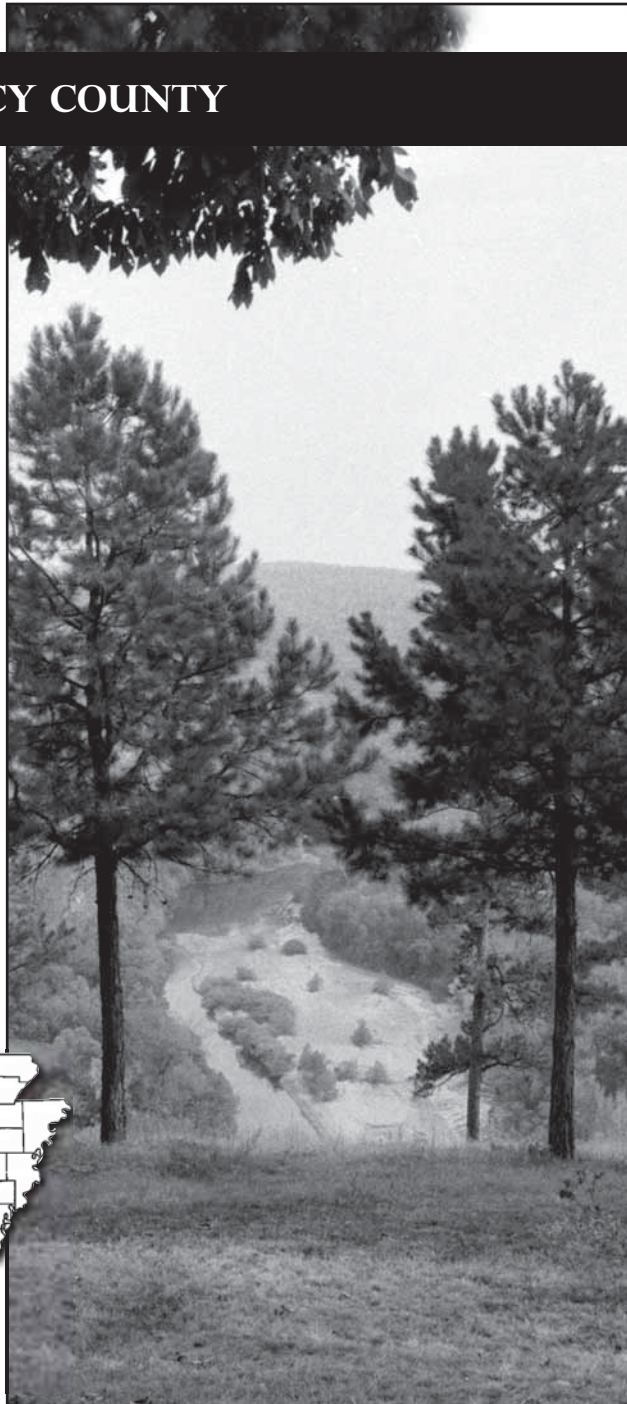

Founded: 1838
County Seat: Marshall
Area: 669 sq. mi.
Population: 8,261

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 2
State Representative: 86, 90
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 20

SEARCY County was created from a part of Marion County (which was, in fact, originally named Searcy County). The name memorializes Richard Searcy, a pioneer of territorial days. Searcy County later contributed land to Van Buren, Stone and Baxter counties.

The former Buffalo River State Park, now called Buffalo Point.

STONE COUNTY

Founded: 1873
County Seat: Mountain View
Area: 609 sq. mi.
Population: 11,499

Districts

Congressional: 1
State Senatorial: 10
State Representative: 71, 86
Court of Appeals: 2
Circuit Court: 16

STONE County lies within the rugged Ozark Mountains; their rocky substance inspired its name. Stone County was formed in 1873 from parts of Izard, Independence, Searcy and Van Buren counties. It is known for its dramatic scenery and preserved folk culture, both of which are potent tourist draws.

Arkansas Folk Festival at the Stone County Courthouse, Mountain View, 1965.

ARKANSAS VOTING AND ELECTIONS

On March 2, 1819, the president of the United States approved a bill which created the Territory of Arkansas. To oversee the new territory, President James Monroe appointed James Miller, a hero of the War of 1812, as governor, and Robert Crittenden, a 21-year-old Kentuckian, as secretary of the territory. Miller's appointment was sent to Arkansas rather than to his New Hampshire home, delaying his arrival, but not delaying the establishment of government; the executive and judicial branches (consisting of Crittenden and three newly appointed Superior Court judges) constituted the legislature in the territory's "first grade" of government.

After an initial short session, two of the three appointed justices left the territory, never to return. In the absence of the governor, Crittenden scheduled the first territorial election for November 20, 1819, seeking to elevate Arkansas to the "second grade" of government with an elected General Assembly. Up to this point, residents of the territory had previously voted as citizens of Missouri Territory, electing local sheriffs, county clerks and delegates to the Missouri Assembly. On November 20, however, they voted as Arkansans for the first time, electing members of the new territorial assembly. Governor Miller arrived at Arkansas Post one month later; one of his first actions was to seek invalidation of the election's results. After much debate, Miller dropped his efforts, acquiescing to Crittenden's fait accompli.

During Arkansas's territorial period, suffrage was limited to white males above the age of twenty-one, with some restrictions as to residence and dependent on paying property tax; unpropertied individuals were effectively excluded from the election rolls. The 1836 statehood Constitution removed the tax-payment requirement, allowing unlanded white male residents to vote. The Reconstruction Constitution of 1868 extended the vote to African-American males while incorporating other restrictions which had the effect of excluding Confederate loyalists and partisans, as well as opponents of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, the criminal and the insane. In 1874, a new constitution was adopted; its language simplified the lengthy provisions and restrictions of its predecessor and it remains the basis for determining who may vote in Arkansas's elections.

Election laws have not, however, remained static since 1874. In 1892, the people of the state approved a constitutional amendment establishing a poll tax of one dollar per male voter. Applied to black and white alike, it theoretically posed no exclusionary impediment of African-American voting but, in practice, discouraged poor voters, black and white alike, from seeking to vote. The poll tax amendment was declared invalid by the state Supreme Court; it was replaced with another measure in 1908. The poll tax rolls constituted Arkansas's only voter registration system until 1964 when voters approved Amendment 51, striking down the poll tax.

After the all-male legislature failed in 1911 and again in 1913 to approve voting for women, the Arkansas Woman Suffrage Association formed to press hard to get it approved. With support from progressive politicians, the General Assembly of 1917 enacted legislation authorizing women to vote in primary elections. Two years later Arkansas ratified the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which allowed women to vote in all elections. It was the twelfth state in the nation, and the second southern state, to ratify the amendment. Shortly after ratification, the town of Winslow, in Washington County, won national fame by choosing an all-woman town government.

Arkansas elections are overseen by the State Board of Election Commissioners and the Secretary of State's Office. Members of the Board of Election Commissioners are appointed by the governor, the legislative chambers and the two major political parties; it is chaired by the secretary of state. Its main duties are to disburse funds for state-funded elections, development of resources for educating and assisting candidates and local election officials, certifying election equipment and monitoring elections.

The Elections Division of the Secretary of State's Office maintains the state's election records and generally assists county officials with scheduling and conducting federal, state and district elections. The division leads the state's program to comply with federal election laws such as the National Voter Registration Act and the Help America Vote Act; it has played a central role in establishing and maintaining Arkansas's uniform statewide voter registration system and continues to help oversee training on the state's electronic voting systems. The division also serves as a clearinghouse for campaign finance reports that are filed with the Arkansas Ethics Commission.

ON SENATORIAL CLASSES

The three classes of U.S. senators, each currently including 33 or 34 senators, constitute the means used by the United States Senate for describing the schedules of Senate seats' elections and of the expiration of the terms of office of the senators holding the respective seats. Each numbered Congress sits for two years, and each senator normally serves a term of six years in office.

The classes date from 1789, when the principle of staggered terms of office was adopted by the U.S. Senate. Class I senators were to leave office after two years, Class II after four years and Class III after a full term of six years. In this way, it was ensured that only one-third of Senate seats would be in play during any single election year, ensuring continuity.

When a new state is admitted to the Union, its two senators are assigned terms that correspond to those of two different classes, among the three classes described above. Which two classes is determined by a scheme that keeps the three classes as close to the same size as possible, i.e., that avoids any class differing by more than one from the minimum-sized class.

Arkansas elects one Class II senator and one Class III senator. Before the ratification of the 17th Amendment on May 31, 1913, U.S. senators were chosen by the General Assembly. Arkansas Senator Joe T. Robinson enjoys the distinction of being the last U.S. Senator to be selected for this office under the old Constitutional system.

ALPHABETICAL ROSTER OF ARKANSAS LEGISLATORS

This union index of Arkansas legislators supplements the session rosters found elsewhere in this volume. It is a revision and development of one compiled by former state representative Jerry Hinshaw and included in his Call the Roll: The First 150 years of the Arkansas Legislature (1986). Efforts have been made to resolve inconsistencies repeating those found in legislative rosters but inevitably, some remain; some rosters are incomplete and legislators' names appear with variant spellings, particularly for the earliest sessions.

Key:

H - Arkansas House of Representatives

S - Arkansas Senate

HSP - Arkansas House of Representatives Speaker

SP - Senate President

AN ARKANSAS BIBLIOGRAPHY:
WORKS THAT SPEAK VOLUMES ABOUT THE NATURAL STATE
David Ware, Arkansas Capitol Historian

The following bibliography contains a wealth of useful texts for those interested in learning more about the Natural State. A number of the works listed are long out of print but are found in many Arkansas libraries. Some have been effectively superseded by others included on the list; such veteran volumes have been retained on this list because of literary qualities or their status as pioneering works in the field. The list includes textbooks and monographs, children's literature and technical reports, novels and works of weighty scholarship. Balance and broad-field coverage have been pursued in its making; it is presented with the admonition that it represents a starting point, rather than an authoritative collection, for apprehending Arkansiana.
